Crippled 'Pirate' Sub Is Reported Found

U. S. to Free 300 Millions Gold to Aid Easy Money

Reserve Board Also to Buy Securities, Meet Need for Cash.

Connection Denied With Fall of Stocks

Action Taken to Supply Seasonal Demands, Officials Assert.

By William V. Nessly.

Seeking to dispel any anticipation of tighter money conditions in the United States, the Federal Reserve Board yesterday announced a two-pronged program for the maintenance of "easy money" conditions. The steps decided on were announced as:

1. Freeing of $300,000,000 of the Treasury's sterilized gold supply;
2. Reserve Board purchasing of Government securities on the open market in whatever additional amounts are necessary to care for expected seasonal increases in the money demand.

"What the board is doing," it was said by one authority, "is assuring people that there will be no pinch or squeeze in the money market."

To Meet Seasonal Need.

While it was declared that recent stock market declines had had nothing to do with formulation of the program, and that similar action probably would have been taken if there had been no stock price changes, still the opinion was expressed in official circles that the board's announcement would have considerable effect in strengthening the market.

The decision was announced after a two-day meeting here of the board's open market committee. The committee announced that "in view of the expected seasonal demands on the banks for currency and credit during the coming weeks," primarily for the carrying of crops and building up of retail store invoices for the fall and Christmas trade, it had authorized its executive committee to purchase in the open market from time to time "sufficient amounts of short-term United States Government obligations to provide funds to meet seasonal withdrawals of currency from the banks and other seasonal requirements." Treasury bills or short-term notes will be purchased.

It said it contemplated reduction of the additional holdings in its open market portfolio "when the seasonal influences are reversed or other circumstances make their retention unnecessary."

For Furthering Recovery.

"The purpose of this action," it continued, "is to maintain at member banks an aggregate volume of excess reserves adequate for the continuation of the system's policy of monetary ease for the furtherance of economic recovery."

In addition, it was announced Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau had agreed, at the board's recommendation, to release the $300,-

Capitol Afire!—For 15 Minutes

A small fire which produced a big smoke broke out beneath the Capitol portico yesterday, drawing eight fire companies and numerous spectators. Scorched paint was principal damage.

Dog Leads Way To Slain Girl, Dying Chinese

Child Shot, Laundryman Gassed; Pronounced Murder, Suicide.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 12.—A policeman, attracted by the odor of gas, smashed in the door of a Brooklyn laundry shop today and found a 14-year-old white girl, dead from a bullet, sprawled on a bed beside a dying Chinese.

The girl, attractive Alice Devine, had been shot through the head. A tube leading from a gas jet lay near the face of 30-year-old George Tong.

Patrolman George Lau, off duty, was sitting on the porch when a poodle dog passed the house dragging its leash. He recognized the dog as the pet of Alice Devine and started a search.

Police listed the case as murder and suicide.

Blame Union Fight In Movie Bombings

New York, Sept. 12 (U.P.).—Police said a jurisdictional dispute between two unions of motion picture operators was responsible for the tear-gas bombings of 24 theaters in which 15 persons were injured tonight. The theaters, located in Manhattan and the Bronx, were bombed simultaneously at 9 p. m.

California Heat Wave.

Los Angeles, Sept. 12 (AP).—Southern California sweltered in a heat wave today. The mercury climbed to 108 at Riverside, 104 in the cotton-growing Imperial Valley; 107 at San Bernardino, and 97 in Los Angeles. Arthur Wejmar, 43, of Turlock, died of sunstroke.

Masaryk Sinking.

Prahe, Czechoslovakia, Sept. 12 (AP).—The condition of Dr. Thomas Garrigue Masaryk, "Little Father" of Czechoslovakia, took a sudden change for the worse today.

Cork Piled to Cool Capitol Gets Hot, Smokes Up Dome

Fire broke out beneath the portico of the Capitol yesterday afternoon, bringing eight fire companies to the scene and several hundred spectators, but causing little damage except to paint.

Great billows of smoke rose in a few moments from high stacks of cork slabs stored beneath the portico, outside the Capitol proper. Prompt action by firemen kept the blaze from spreading to the interior.

Apparently the fire was caused by a short circuit in temporary overhead wires strung above the cork slabs. The cork was to be used for insulating the new House air-cooling system.

U. S. Agents Seize 4 In Bogus Money Raid

New York, Sept. 12 (U.P.).—Federal officials announced tonight the arrest of four men and seizure of 45 plates, valued at $36,000, in a series of raids to smash a counterfeiting ring which has flooded New York.

Yeggs Roll Safe Holding $2,000 Past 2 Guards

Same Gang Suspected in Epidemic of Thirty Strong Box Thefts.

While two watchmen were stationed in another part of the building, daring yeggmen early yesterday removed a 1,500-pound safe containing $2,000 from the Washington Beef & Provision Co., 1110 E street southwest.

Backing a truck up to the loading platform in the rear of the building, the men rolled the heavy strong box into the truck and drove away undetected.

Levi Pratt, 1411 Thirty-seventh street northwest, manager of the company, reported the theft to police. He said that the building was unoccupied except for the watchmen from 6:30 Saturday night.

Inspector Bernard W. Thompson, chief of detectives, said the job probably was done by the gang that cracked 30 safes here in six months.

Crises Abroad Hurry Return Of Roosevelt

Holiday Ends Tonight; Early Meeting With Cabinet Forecast.

Davis, Moffett Discuss Foreign Affairs With President.

By the Associated Press.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Sept. 12.—Possibility of an early Cabinet meeting to discuss the latest turn in the Far Eastern and European crises was seen tonight after President Roosevelt had decided to return to Washington a day earlier than planned.

The President, with much other official business accumulated during his 18-day stay away from Washington, will leave here tomorrow night and arrive in the Capital Tuesday morning.

The usual Cabinet meeting, it was indicated, may be moved up from Friday to Tuesday or Wednesday, not only because of the foreign situations but due to the fact the President has a full day scheduled for Friday.

He will motor to Sharpsburg, Md., to attend the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Civil War Battle of Antietam and Friday night will deliver a Constitution Day address.

Meanwhile, the President, following his promise to do everything possible to "keep us out of war," continued his consultations on foreign affairs today during a five-hour cruise on the Hudson River.

He talked with Norman H. Davis, Ambassador at Large to Europe, and James A. Moffett, Standard Oil official and former Federal housing administrator, who spent some time in China before the recent Japanese invasion.

Silent on Next Address.

Thomas G. Corcoran, young Presidential adviser on legislation and policy, and Samuel I. Rosenman, New York State Supreme Court justice, another White House consultant, also were guests on the yacht Potomac, presumably to go over some ideas for the Roosevelt speech Friday night in Washington.

The Chief Executive said yesterday he had no idea what he will talk about in his Constitution Day address.

Other guests on the trip were Mrs. Norman H. Davis and Col. J. M. Patterson, New York City publisher.

The "keep us out of war" declaration was made late yesterday to an outdoor gathering of the Roosevelt Home Club, an organization of friends and neighbors formed when

Suspect Seized Here in $10,000 Coast Swindle

Arrested in a rooming house in the 1700 block of Fourteenth street northwest yesterday, Milfred Reno Yant, 38, is being held for Los Angeles, Calif., authorities who, police said, want him on a charge of swindling Los Angeles citizens out of $10,000 by selling bogus oil stock.

When arrested, Yant and his wife were preparing to leave the city for Florida. Five expensive steamer trunks and $5,000 in traveler's checks were found in his possession, police said.

Nationality Hidden; Chinese Retreating

Japanese Make Major Gains After Bloodiest Fighting of War.

'Hindenburg Line' In Invaders' Path

Defenders Driven From Race Course; 200,000 Troops Engaged.

By the United Press.

Shanghai (Monday), Sept. 13.—Japanese troops seized the Far Eastern race course north of the International Settlement today after a week of fierce fighting in which the Chinese defenders were subjected to an almost ceaseless barrage from navy and land batteries and bombing planes.

The Japanese claimed the Chinese also were withdrawing from the civic center and Lotien, strategic town on the Shanghai-Liuho military highway.

[The Chinese command was reported preparing to withdraw to its strongly fortified second line of defense, according to the Associated Press.—Editor's note.]

Fighting Continues.

Fighting north and northwest of Shanghai continued on an increasingly large scale, with fresh Japanese troops landing to aid their comrades, who had been held in check by the Chinese for a week.

It was indicated the Chinese were concentrating heavily in the suburb of Kiangwan and that a bitter struggle for its possession was about to ensue.

A terrific conflagration, 3 miles long, raged a mile from the northern boundary of the Settlement.

At dawn today the Japanese had consolidated a line more than 20 miles long on the bank of the Yangtze River from Liuho to Woosung, and had penetrated about 7 miles inland.

Simultaneously the Japanese claimed important victories in North China and asserted the whole war was turning gradually in their favor.

The fighting here was reaching a ferocity almost unparalleled in modern war. More than 200,000 Chinese and Japanese soldiers were engaged.

Neither side is taking prisoners.

"Suicide Before Surrender."

Japanes commanders are enforcing a policy of "suicide before surrender," while Chinese leaders have warned their men that "torture worse than death" awaits those who are taken by the enemy.

Meanwhile, there were increasing indications a major battle between some 250,000 Chinese troops north of Yellow River and about 70,000 Japanese attacking their advance posts is impending. The Japanese were expected to capture Tatungfu, in northern Shansi Province, at any moment and to continue into Suiyuan Province.

In Nanking T. V. Soong, Harvard-educated governor of the Bank of China, announced subscriptions to the central government's "liberty loan" have reached almost $26,000,000, assuring ample funds for the purchase of munitions abroad if they can be moved through the Japanese naval blockade of China's coast.

Threats to Peace

IN EUROPE

A damaged "pirate" submarine was reported to have been found by Spanish Loyalist divers off the Cartagena naval base with its crew alive but unable to bring the craft to the surface. Europe awaited identification of the craft.

Fear of the small Balkan nations they might become involved in a conflict with Italy was revealed as the reason France and Britain were forced to assume responsibility for policing the Mediterranean.

Italy's reply to the French and British invitation to join in the international naval war on the submarine "pirates" was tensely awaited. Indications were she would refuse.

Adolf Hitler declared at Nurnberg that there will be no security in Europe until Germany is given back her colonies—Page 3.

THE FAR EAST

Chinese continued their fierce resistance of Japanese invaders at Shanghai, but it was indicated the Chinese troops planned soon to fall back to their second line of defense.

China took its case to the League of Nations with an appeal that world powers apply sanctions against Japan.

French Blame Paris Bombing Upon Italians

Official Sees Attempt to Keep His Nation Busy With Home Troubles.

By the United Press.

Paris (Monday), Sept. 13.—Minister of Interior Marx Dormoy intimated today that the bombing of two employers associations buildings Saturday night was another episode in a series of international disturbances aimed at keeping France occupied with internal troubles so she would be unable to give attention to affairs abroad.

"The explosive was tolite," Dormoy said. "Very little tolite exists in France. Hexogene constituted a part of the detonator, a product not existing in France. It is not for me to tell you where it is obtainable. But I can say we entertain definite suspicions."

Rightist and Leftist organizations, which earlier had accused each other of the bombings, joined in intimating that Italian Fascists were responsible.

Grave internal repercussions had been feared as a result of the bombings when Rightists first accused labor of turning to anarchy to intimidate employers who have been fighting their demands.

Midair Collision Kills 4 in 1 Plane; Another Explodes

South Bend, Ind., Sept. 12 (AP).—Four persons were killed near here today when two airplanes crashed in midair.

The dead: Floyd Allenbaugh, about 40, of Elkhart; Lloyd Butz, about 26, of Mishawaka; Abbie M. Beebe, 32, of South Bend; Fred B. Kidder, about 50, of Houlton, Me.

The four killed were riding in a monoplane piloted by Allenbaugh. Allenbaugh, approaching the field, banked for a landing.

Port Townsend, Wash., Sept. 12 (AP).—One man was killed and another saved when a Marine Corps Reserve scouting plane caught fire and exploded in midair during maneuvers over Pudget Sound today.

Technical Sergt. John F. Billsborrow, of Seattle, "bailed out" when the plane burst into flames, but he struck the plane's tail and hit the water without his parachute opening. He was killed.

Craft Lying on Bottom, Loyalists Announce; Diplomats Tense.

9-Power Patrols Blocked by Fear

Balkans Afraid of Duce; Britain, France Await Word From Italy.

By the United Press.

Madrid, Sept. 12.—A damaged "pirate" submarine with its crew alive but unable to bring the craft to the surface was reported tonight to have been found by Spanish loyalist divers off the Cartagena naval base.

The Febus official news agency reported the discovery from Cartagena, on the southern Mediterranean coast of Spain, but war office officials in Madrid refused either to confirm or deny the dispatch.

The submarine was said to be lying on the sea bottom. Its air supply was running low, Febus said, and many of the crew were near collapse.

There was nothing to indicate nationality of the craft.

Depth Bombs Dropped.

It was believed, however, it was the "pirate" submarine attacked by Loyalist warships Friday off Pornat, near Cartagena.

The warships dropped several depth bombs around the spot where the submarine's periscope disappeared, and reported pools of oil rose to the surface.

Cartagena naval authorities who investigated said they believed the submarine had been destroyed or incapacitated. Divers of the loyalist navy were summoned and have been searching the vicinity for two days.

Diplomats in Madrid were intensely interested in the reported "trapping" of the submarine.

If it is revealed as one of the phantom undersea craft preying on Mediterranean shipping, they said, disclosure of its nationality would be a major embarrassment to some nation.

Although the British and French and most other admiralties have suspected the "pirate" submarines of being Italian, only Russia has formally accused Italy of being responsible for the terrorism.

Balkan Fears Revealed.

Copyright, 1937, by the United Press.

London, Sept. 12.—Fears of the small Balkan nations that use of their navies to hunt down "pirate" submarines might involve them in a conflict with Italy shattered a daring plan to combat Mediterranean terrorism, it was revealed authoritatively tonight.

Great Britain, France and Russia demanded at the Nyon, Switzerland, conference that the nine participating powers pool their fleets, chart zones in the Mediterranean and "shoot to sink" any submarine that ventured into the trade routes.

The Balkan group, including Rumania, Bulgaria and Yugoslavia, admitted in the secret sessions of the conference that they were afraid of arousing Premier Mussolini's wrath. Because of these fears they refused to lend their fleets to the scheme and Greece and Turkey followed suit.

Seek Italian Approval.

London, Sept. 12 (AP).—Europe looked to Italy tonight for the approving nod that may speed to success the latest plan for peace, a fighting naval armada to drive pirate submarines from the Mediterranean.

Jimmy Mattern Lands Here After Record Flight From Alaska; Makes Sad Report of Futile 17-Day Search for Soviet Airmen

Convinced, Crew Which Once Rescued Him Did Not Survive Crash.

By Eugene Warner.

After the fastest flight from Alaska in history, 21½ hours flying time via Los Angeles, Jimmy Mattern whirled into Washington Airport yesterday afternoon to report to the Soviet Embassy on his search for six Russian Polar fliers lost far above the Artic Circle.

Mattern, who himself was saved from a Siberian death in 1933 by the crew of the lost ship, is convinced that his Russian flying friends are dead, lost forever in the rugged ice wastes of the Arctic. Saddened by their loss, he stretched out on a bed at the Washington Hotel and quietly told of his efforts to find them. He was very tired.

Assistant Secretary of War Urges Larger Standing Army

Forces of U. S. Held Smallest Among Powers

Johnson Denies Increase Would Enter Nation in Arms Race.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 12.—Creation of a larger standing Army was urged today by Louis Johnson, Assistant Secretary of War, to defend the United States against "world-wide forces of evil trying to push civilization to an Armageddon."

Johnson smiled and refused comment when he was introduced to a Constitution Day assembly of war veterans and patriotic organizations in Brooklyn as "the next Secretary of War." A report that he would succeed Harry Woodring as head of the War Department had been published today in the New York Times.

Johnson declared the military strength of this country is outranked by all first-class powers and most of the minor nations.

He numbered the standing Army at 12,000 officers and 165,000 enlisted men.

"Portugal and Greece," he said, "each has a force greater than our combined regular Army, Navy, National Guard, Officers Reserve Corps and all other reserve units.

"In an emergency even peace-loving Sweden is ready to put in the field almost 900,000 men, while our available strength for immediate use is less than 500,000.

"Our minimum needs today are 14,000 officers and 165,000 enlisted men. * * * I trust that Congress will soon appropriate sufficient funds to bring our Army to its necessary strength.

"Even with these additions, however, we will still rank in the size of our standing Army below all first-rate powers. Therefore, I feel confident that there is no danger these increases will head the United States toward militarism.

"Ours is not a policy of aggression. We compete with no foreign powers in the race for armament nor in the lust for conquest. We ask that we be allowed to work out our own destiny in our own way without any outside interference."

Guard to Receive Prizes Tomorrow

The Army and Navy Union will present placques to the winning companies of the District National Guard tomorrow night at 8 o'clock during ceremonies to be held on the Mall opposite the Armory.

Official judging of National Guard companies took place at their summer encampment at Camp Ritchie, but presentation of the plaques to the District companies was postponed in order to have the ceremonies here. Winning engineer companies were Company C, 121st Engineers, first place; Company F, 121st Engineers, second place, and Headquarters Company of the Twenty-ninth Division, first place in the special troops class.

Col. John Oehmann, commanding officer of the District National Guard, was elected as national council administration member of the Army and Navy Union at a meeting Friday night, and Fred M. Dryden, present department commander, was elected alternate member of the council. Norris I. Perry was elected department judge advocate for the coming year.

Estranged Husband Slays Wife, Wounds 2

Salyersville, Ky., Sept. 12 (AP).—While more than 300 persons attending an outdoor church meeting looked on, Mrs. Lena Rudd, 21, was shot to death today, deputy sheriffs said, by her estranged husband, Dorsey Rudd, 25-year-old livestock dealer.

Officers said Rudd then turned the gun on Miss Ruby May, 15, who was holding the Rudds' infant daughter. Miss May was reported in critical condition tonight. Another woman, Mrs. Boyd Pickelsiner, about 60, was struck by a stray bullet. Rudd was brought to the county jail here, then removed to Paintsville, Ky., to avoid mob violence.

'Branded' Woman Leaps To Death Off Bridge

New York, Sept. 12 (U.P.).—An unidentified woman, branded on the right ankle with the initials "S. H. E." was rescued from the Hudson River tonight a mile below the George Washington Bridge, from which she jumped or was thrown. Rushed to Columbus Hospital, the woman died.

Drive Opened Against Guild By Federation

A. F. L. Hopes to Enroll Those Dissatisfied With C. I. O. Affiliation.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, Sept. 12.—The American Federation of Labor outlawed the American Newspaper Guild today and announced the beginning of "a militant drive" against the C. I. O. unit through its own newspaper unions.

William Green, president of the A. F. L., who announced the expulsion of the guild, said in a prepared statement:

"All news and editorial employes of newspapers throughout the country will be invited to join federal unions organized by the A. F. L. It is expected members of the guild who voted against affiliation with the Committee for Industrial Organization, or against its political policies will form the nucleus of this new organization."

Headquarters of the guild announced yesterday in New York a referendum of the membership showed 3,392 in favor and 1,691 against the action of the national guild convention here last June which voted to affiliate with the C. I. O., headed by John L. Lewis.

Green said the new A. F. L.-sponsored union for newspaper workers "will be accorded the fullest support by the mechanical trades unions of the A. F. L., which for years have been solidly intrenched in the newspaper business. Without the help and support of these unions the guild will be unable to maintain its position. The A. F. L. will resist any attempt of the C. I. O. to bring noneditorial and clerical workers into guild membership. Such employes will be urged to join the established printing and mechanical trades unions."

Declaring guild members "may be committed by their association with the C. I. O. to a definite political policy," Green recalled the federation "for 50 years has been fighting for a free press. . . . History shows dictatorships cannot be etsablished without destruction of free trade unionism and that free trade unionism cannot be wiped out while free press exists."

Green addressed a labor rally here last night and planned to go today to Louisville, Ky.

Man Uses Gluey Tape To Plunder Poor Box

Cincinnati, Sept. 12 (AP).—Mgr. William J. Anthony seized a man at the poor box of St. Peter's Cathedral today and marched him across the street to Central Police Station. Detective John Bugganer said the man, registered as Albert Weymundt, 61, admitted taking money from the box with a flexible tape smeared with glue.

Sperry to Head 1937 Roll Call For Red Cross

D. C. Gas and Light Co. President Is Named as Chairman.

Marcy L. Sperry, president of the Washington Gas and Light Co., will be chairman of the twenty-first annual roll call of the District Chapter American Red Cross, Brig. Gen. F. R. Keefer, chapter president, announced yesterday. The roll call will be conducted from September 26 through October 16.

Along with Sperry, Gen. John J. Pershing received an appointment to once more serve as honorary chairman of the membership drive.

Brig. Gen. Keefer stressed the need for expansion of Red Cross services and said the local chapter had set up a quota of 75,000 members. Last year, under the direction of Lloyd B. Wilson, president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., the District Chapter realized the largest membership in its history.

Accepting the chairmanship Sperry said:

"I am very happy to do my part in the coming roll call, because it is a real privilege to serve the Red Cross. It is truly a unique organization, meeting human crises individually as they occur, and carrying the generosity and sympathy of the country to the needy."

Gen. Keefer pointed to Chairman Sperry as "an outstanding figure in civic and philanthropic work in our city."

"He is thoroughly familiar with the Red Cross, its work and its ideals," he added.

Lines' Poverty Held Threat to U. S. Ship Plans

Companies Cannot Finance Share of Sea Program,' Kennedy Asserts.

By the Associated Press.

Joseph P. Kennedy, chairman of the Maritime Commission, said yesterday an unexpected crisis threatens the Government's merchant marine program because of the "apparent inability" of certain private operators to finance their share of construction costs.

Shipping interests, meanwhile, loosened a broadside of criticism at "unsatisfactory provisions which make it impossible to operate on a Government subsidy."

Kennedy's statement was based on returns from a correlated survey of the shipping industry which he expects to make public about October 1.

"If we removed every restriction and guaranteed them (the ship operators) everything except actual profits, they still couldn't put up a dime," said one of his associates.

Unable to Proceed.

The chairman deferred comment other than that the commission "would have to let the country know" it seemed impossible to proceed with plans Congress laid down for an American merchant armada in the merchant marine act of 1936.

He hesitated to say definitely that none of the 300 to 350 new ships would be built because of the private capital situation, but was emphatic that the Government intended neither to operate the fleet nor "build it free of charge" for others to run.

His latter remark was directed at reports New York steamship owners expect the maritime commission to build new ships and offer them for charter to American shipping companies.

"If the United States is to have any merchant marine at all in the future," the ship owners were quoted as saying, "the Government will have to build it itself.

Want to Rent Ships.

"That would eliminate the controversy over foreign and domestic construction differentials, the ships would have the extra speed and gun platforms to make them a wartime naval auxiliary, and the companies which operate them without subsidies would do so as private concerns. They would pay the Government rent for the vessels and use them as a competitive world basis."

Commission sources said this attitude was an "about face" on the part of the shippers, and "conceived as propaganda to conceal the true state of their financial responsibility."

"We didn't hear any of this," they said, "until the commission's survey turned up slender balance sheets and disclosed that corporate structures had drained some steamship companies."

The Government, under the new law replacing ocean mail subsidies, was to lend American steamship owners operating to a foreign port 75 per cent of the cost of constructing a new ship and to rebate up to 33 1-3 per cent (and under certain conditions up to 50 per cent) of that cost when it exceeded the expense of building a similar ship in foreign shipyards.

Also, it was to pay the operators the difference between American and foreign costs of running a vessel.

There are strings attached, however, and these strings are what steamship owners say keep them from proceeding with ship construction.

They criticize especially the ban on salaries of more than $25,000 a year to officers of companies receiving Government subsidies, and the stipulation that company books be open to Government inspection.

Installation of engines capable of driving a ship at 18 knots is not always feasible for peace-time trade operations, they said, and the added weight of gun foundations would reduce the amount of paying cargo the ship could carry.

QUESTION:
Is it worth while for Camel to spend millions more for finer Tobaccos?

ANSWER:
Camels are the largest-selling cigarette in America!

IT is homespun fact that nothing man does to tobacco can take the place of what Nature does. People get more pleasure out of Camels because Camels are made of those finer tobaccos into which Nature put extra goodness and mildness. Camels are a matchless blend of FINER, MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCOS—Turkish and Domestic.

Thousands of Soviet Youth Brand Pirates 'Fascist Swine,' Pledge Extermination

Stalin Reviews Parade; Press Seeks Reprisals

Orators Warn Throngs of Menace to Safety of Fatherland.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, Sept. 12.—Huge demonstrations in Moscow's famous Red Square, in which "Fascist piracy" and "Fascist swine" were denounced, pledged support today to the Soviet government in its bitter controversy with Italy in the Mediterranean.

At the same time the official Soviet press declared the nation would proceed with reprisals against Fascist Italy.

Hundreds of thousands of his followers marched before Joseph Stalin, standing calmly smoking a pipe before the tomb of Lenin, in celebration of International Youth Day. Banners and broadcast speeches proclaimed readiness to fight the "Fascist enemy."

Circles close to the government, however, indicated Russia probably would accept the accord of Nyon for a predominantly Anglo-French antipirate patrol of the Mediterranean, accepted by delegates of nine powers yesterday, although Russian leaders considered it inadequate for real protection of shipping.

Forecasts Own Measures.

Pravda, organ of the Communist Party, declared the Soviet Union would take its own measures against "Italian pirates," but did not reveal those measures. Russia in two formal notes has charged Italian submarines with sinking Soviet vessels.

Stalin, beside Premier V. V. Molotoff, first reviewed a huge procession of Soviet youth, bearing such slogans as "The Fascist pirates won't escape us." The anti-Italian phase of the demonstration took prominence over the usual glorification of the Soviet generation now being called to the colors.

The spokesman of thousands of conscripts who marched past declared, "We will destroy the enemy."

It was an impressive demonstration of youth, brilliant with banners and costumes of red, blue and white that marched past the man who holds the destinies of the nation in his hand.

Orators shouted through loudspeakers "to let the Fascist swine know * * * that millions of Soviet youth are ready to defend the fatherland."

Then converging streams of older men and women poured for hours into the square, forming an almost solid jumble of banners, heroic pictures of Communist leaders, a life-size statue of Lenin and huge cartoons of "Fascist enemies," including one showing a Soviet fist smashing a submarine, with Mussolini's head at the prow, to the bottom of the sea.

Pravda said that "although the decision of the (Nyon) conference will not sufficiently assure the safety of merchant shipping in the Mediterranean, it nevertheless will be capable of making difficult further provocations by Fascist pirates."

"The Soviet Union," Pravda continued, "will support fully the decision adopted by the conference to assure the safety of the Mediterranean."

Duce Opposes Nyon Accord.

Rome, Sept. 12 (AP).—Italian political circles were pessimistic tonight over the prospects of Italian acceptance of the Nyon accord to sweep submarine "piracy" from the Mediterranean.

Informed sources said many points of the Nyon patrol plan, which left the way open for Italy to join, were acceptable to Italy. However, it was felt the scheme would favor the Valencia government in the Spanish civil war as against the insurgent regime which Italy is aiding, by what Italians considered indirect but implied acceptance of the belligerent status of the Spanish insurgents.

Britain to Carry 'Light Infantry' In Troop Planes

London, Sept 12 (U.P.).—Britain intends to create a new military unit composed of men weighing less than 112 pounds for aviation purposes, the Sunday Referee said today. The men will be carried on "troop planes" wherever a small expeditionary force is required.

By using small men, the war office can pack one-third again as many soldiers into a plane, the paper said. The "very light infantry" will be paid higher rates than ordinary infantry and will be stationed in India and Egypt, it added.

End Is Threatened To War Cargoes

New York, Sept. 12 (AP).—The New York Maritime Council, a group of marine unions, told the Federal Maritime Commission today that unless a conference is called by noon tomorrow to discuss sailors' bonuses, no American ship would sail into war zones.

The council, which includes C. I. O. National Maritime Union, wrote Chairman Joseph P. Kennedy of the commission:

"Steamship companies have not hesitated to increase cargo and passenger rates for trips in war zones. The seamen also feel that they are entitled to extra pay . . ."

French Troops Mark First Marne Victory

Paris, Sept. 12 (AP).—Northeast of Paris today gay throngs cheered thousands of marching war veterans celebrating the twenty-third anniversary of the victory of the Marne. Northwest of Paris 45,000 troops maneuvered under the eyes of the high French command.

Alaskan Flying Perils: Mattern's Photos of Russian Plane Search

Franco Loses 10,000 to Halt Zaragoza Drive

Loyalists Mass to Press Gains; Claim Rebels Checked at Gijon.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, Sept. 12.—The Spanish government today was massing its troops for a new drive toward Zaragoza, key insurgent city on the Aragon front.

It was claimed this offensive has cost Insurgent Generalissimo Franco over 10,000 men, including dead, wounded and 3,000 prisoners, in the last two weeks.

The capture of the village of Belchite, a bloody engagement which lasted several days, was regarded as a signal loyalist victory. Prisoners were quoted as saying the insurgent Falangists were angered at Franco's general staff for failing to relieve the siege there.

In northwestern Spain, where Asturians were battling Franco's columns to hold the seaport of Gijon, the government asserted its forces had halted the drive along the shore road. An offensive has been started south of Gijon, and the insurgent-held village of Polade Gordon was reduced to ruins as the result of a terrific air bombardment.

Government troops withdrew before insurgent pressure in the Villa-Marin sector, some 40 miles south of Oviedo, in favor of stronger positions. The defenders hoped to hold the steep Pajares Pass until winter, which virtually will block the movement of Franco's mechanized troops toward Oviedo by this route.

Only U. S. Is Held Equipped to Win Long, Lone War

By the United Press.

The United States is the only major world power capable of carrying on a prolonged war as an individual nation and even this country needs certain raw materials that go into the manufacture of arms and ammunition, an American military official has found after long study, it was learned yesterday.

Neither Japan nor Germany and Italy have sufficient financial and commodity resources to win a long war, statistics show.

In a survey based on the availability of 24 essential minerals and commodities, Col. John A. Wagner, United States Quartermaster Corps, retired, gives the United States a self-sufficiency rating of 22.35, and places Germany a poor second with 6.20. Japan trailed the seven powers with a rating of only 1.77.

Other ratings ars France, 5.37; Russia, 4.95; Great Britain, 4.50, and Italy, 1.92.

Mattern Tells of Polar Search for Fliers

ghenies,"—and no landing field when he got back, if he did.

The last that was heard of the Russians was a radio flash from the Pole at 2 a. m. August 13, saying one motor was out. At 3 a. m. word came they were descending. They were known to be flying straight down the 48th meridian, which would take them over Fairbanks, Alaska. That is all that was known about their location.

Organizing an expedition, which included his own Ford refueling plane, Mattern, at the behest of the Soviet Embassy, winged out of Oakland, Calif., in his high-speed special $100,000 Lockheed for a record-breaking dash to Fairbanks in 13½ hours. With him was his navigator, H. S. (Hank) Jones.

The Ford plane was loaded with fuel and supplies. The plan was for the Ford to refuel the Lockheed in midair, as had often been rehearsed in California, so that Mattern could continue his search in the vicinity of the Pole indefinitely, without having to return to Point Barrow, northernmost American outpost, several hundred miles across the Arctic Circle.

Plane Crashes.

The big Ford flew all the way to Fairbanks, and then crashed 3 miles south of the airport. This was to be a serious handicap in the search, and limited Mattern's polar flights to two. His own ship mired to the hubs every time it landed on an Alaskan seaside pasture, in danger of capsizing every time he put it down.

Using as his headquarters the fur-trading hut of "the King of the Arctic," Charles Brauer, the man Will Rogers and Wiley Post were going to see, Mattern scoured the region along the seacoast and up the forty-eighth meridian to within 400 miles of the Pole, for 17 days. He also combed the extremely rough mountainous interior without success.

"It was much worse than a flight to Moscow would have been," he said yesterday. "On a long flight you set your course and watch your altitude and go. But on a search like that you have to stay down close to the water or the mountains, and with no visibility because of fog and high peaks of ice and in the mountains, it was pretty dangerous. I'd fly to Moscow twice any day rather than one of those searching trips.

"Then another thing, you didn't ever know whether you could find your landing field when you came back because of the fog, nor could you tell whether you were going to crash when you hit the soft mud. That mud had already killed Rogers and Wiley, and crashed my Ford, so it had me worried.

"We wore Eskimo parkas all the time, ate seal meat and eggs 18 months old—most of the food was frozen and brought in once a year—but it wasn't so terrible, I guess. After all, I was much worse off in 1933 when I crashed in Siberia on my round-the-world flight and was lost for two weeks before Eskimos found me, and was finally picked up by Levanevsky and his crew. I knew all the fellows on his ship. They stick together. They were the same ones who picked me up near the Bering Sea."

Mattern will report to Soviet Counselor Ormanski at 11 a. m. today. He brought with him scores of photographs of the region he explored and voluminous notes on his search. With Mattern was Jack Clark, representative of Col. M. L. Benedum, Pittsburgh oil magnate backer of Mattern, and part financier with the Soviet Union of the Arctic search.

Mattern had only two complaints about his record trip from Alaska: (1) He didn't get to Cleveland in time to fly in the National Air Races, and (2) while it took him 55 minutes to fly here from Pittsburgh, it took him 50 minutes to find a place to park his plane.

Rescue Flier Down.

Barrow, Alaska, Sept. 12.—Soviet Pilot Basil Zadkoff crashed in the Arctic Ocean north of here, it was reported today, while searching for the six Russian transpolar airmen missing since August 13.

It was understood here that Zadkoff's flying boat disappeared beneath the ice-choked ocean, but that the pilot was safe.

At the same time the report said another flying boat and an amphibian from the Soviet ice-breaker Krassin were stormbound.

Zadkoff, one of the first fliers to join the search for the missing transpolar plane, took off from the ice-breaker yesterday in his second search over the frozen wastes.

Bank Bandits Caught.

Tel Aviv, Palestine, Sept. 12 (U.P.). A gang of bandits who executed a $25,000 holdup of a messenger in front of the Anglo-Palestine Bank here were captured late today.

Typhoon Returns, Japan's Toll Rises

Tokyo, Sept. 12 (AP).—The destructive typhon which killed at least 60 persons yesterday along Japan's western and southern coasts before swinging into the Sea of Japan claimed 10 more lives today by striking inland again through Aomori Prefecture, at the northern tip of the main island, Honshu.

Two thousand houses were inundated, 25 small boats swept out to sea, railroad embankments washed out and train service was disrupted. Fire added to the havoc in some villages.

Hitler Predicts Food Shortage, Asks Colonies

Denies Reich Plans War, Cites 'Moral Rights' to Lost Lands.

By the United Press.

Nurnberg, Bavaria, Sept. 12.—Chancellor Hitler, admitting Germany faces a serious food shortage, said tonight Europe will have no security until the question of colonies is settled.

He hastened to add Germany has no warlike plans and described "peaceful construction programs" that will keep the 66,000,000 people of the nation busy for many years.

Der Fuehrer, showing the strain of his speech-a-day schedule at the Nazi Party rally here, talked with newspaper correspondents in a little room high up in the Kaiserburg, medieval imperial castle of the eleventh century.

Cites "Moral Right."

The castle looks down on the gathering of nearly 700,000 Nazis here for the rally whose theme has been "down with bolshevism."

Der Fuehrer avoided specific mention of what colonies Germany wants returned, but insisted "Germany has a moral right to those taken from her" in the postwar revision of European holdings.

His admission of the food problem was made in connection with the colonial demand after he had explained the Reich was without sufficient sources of raw materials.

"I urge all nations to treat the minorities decently," he said.

He avoided mention of the crisis in the Mediterranean and the growing antagonism between his Fascist ally, Italy, and Soviet Russia.

In an earlier speech to 100,000 brown and black-shirted men of the S. A. and S. S. storm troops, he told them it might be necessary to "defend yourselves fanatically" against "our old enemy (communism) seeking to destroy our nation."

German newspapers meanwhile rejoiced over a "defeat" of Russia at the Nyon Mediterranean conference struggling to find a solution for submarine "piracy."

Chinese Plan Retreat From Shanghai Front

stem the cholera epidemic which broke out in the Paoshan sector of the Japanese lines here and among more than 1,000,000 Chinese refugees in the Shanghai International Settlement and the French Concession.

Shanghai (Monday), Sept. 13 (AP).—Although masses of Chinese infantry still fought with fury against the Japanese war machine's thrust north of Shanghai, strong evidence developed today that the Chinese command was preparing for retirement to its second defense line to the west.

All Sunday and through the night the battle raged in and around Yanghang, 10 miles north of Shanghai and keypoint in the present battle lines along the Whangpoo and Yangtze Rivers.

Yanghang, with not a house left standing, changed hands several times Both sides reported enormous casualties. Authorities said it was the bloodiest day's fighting of the battle for Shanghai, now in its fifth week. Chinese said their lines had held.

The Chinese second line described as a series of interlocking "Hindenburg Lines," runs from Chenju, 5 miles west of Shanghai, through Nansiang and Kiating to a point northwest of Liuho on the Yangtze, about 25 miles northwest of here.

It has long been prepared for the main Chinese stand in the Shanghai-Nanking area. It has successive trench systems, with concrete pillboxes, bombproof dugouts, communicating trenches linked with roads running back from this point to Nanking and Hangchow, where heavy forces are held in reserve.

China Asks Sanctions.

By the United Press.

Geneva, Sept. 12.—China formally filed an appeal with the League of Nations tonight asking it to invoke sanctions against Japan in order to halt "intolerable Japanese aggressions in what has developed into a world crisis."

The appeal, which will be placed before the League Assembly meeting at noon tomorrow, is based on Article 17 of the League Covenant providing for economic and military sanctions.

The Chinese delegation also will seek an immediate convocation of the international advisory committee on Sino-Japanese conflicts, which would bring the United States into diplomatic consultations on the Far East crisis.

The advisory committee was created in 1931 at the time of Japan's Manchurian invasion and, under a resolution of the League Assembly, the United States was given membership even though it was not a League member.

Article 17 of the League Covenant, under which China hopes to cripple her enemy by means of sanctions, never has been invoked.

It deals with disputes between a League state and a nonmember. Japan is not seated in the League.

The article provides that should the nonmember refuse a League invitation to discuss the dispute at Geneva, then sanctions may be invoked if it is shown the nonmember has resorted to an aggressive war.

The Chinese delegation was aware of the difficulties of persuading the League to impose sanctions on Japan because of the failure of 61 world nations to halt Italy's conquest of Ethiopia by the same means, and the international crisis which the effort precipitated.

The appeal under Article 17 was expected, however, to mobilize public support in the United States and Great Britain on China's side, the Chinese spokesman said.

France already has asked the United States to send an "observer" if the Chinese protest is placed before the League Assembly.

War in China Held Boon To U. S. Tung Oil Trade

By the Associated Press.

The conflict in the Far East may prove a boon to a struggling domestic industry—the production of tung oil.

China now is chief supply source for this oil, which L. A. Wheeler, foreign trade expert at the Agriculture Department said yesterday, is utilized in high grade varnishes and paints for its fast drying qualities. More than 100,000,000 pounds of this oil, valued at from $13,000,000 to $18,000,000, has been imported in recent years, the bulk coming from China.

Sports . .

MANY people never think of The Homestead without thinking of its superlative golf, on two unbeatable courses—

Or tennis, on en tout cas or clay courts—or riding and driving on country roads, well-kept trails—or skeet on the loveliest field in the land—or swimming in a huge indoor pool—or hiking the paths of an entrancing wilderness.

And if you have some little chronic ache or pain, or some apparently habitual tiredness, which keeps your mind from an attraction to sports, then the private Spa right here at your elbow is just the thing—thousands have found it so—to make sports appealing again.

Of course, though, there are many others who think of the bridge games in the Tower lobby; or evenings in The Homestead theatre (right in the building), and dancing in the Crystal Room and the Colonial Dining Room.

But what a place to just loaf in luxury, and get well rested, for once!

Last Rites Held For Samuel Smith, Noted Drum Major

Funeral services for Samuel Page Smith, nationally known to thousands as "Struttin' Sam," flashy drum major at various times for the Community Center, the Columbia Lodge and the Morning Star Lodge bands, affiliated with colored Elks organizations, were held yesterday at Jarvis' Chapel, while an overflow audience blocked traffic on U street between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets for two hours.

None of the lodges participated officially, as the drum major had severed connection with Morning Star Lodge, his last affiliation, more than six months ago. But, unofficially, fraternity members attended in large numbers and tribute was paid by various lodge and grand lodge officers.

Included among the speakers were Past Grand Exalted Ruler John F. Ross and Past Exalted Rulers Herbert E. Jones and Allen A. C. Griffith, of Columbia Lodge. The funeral sermon was preached by the Rev. S. A. Warren, following the reading of condolences from the immediate family, and from the band organizations of which the drum major had been a member.

Man Killed, 3 Hurt In Auto Crashes

One person died and three others were injured as the result of traffic accidents in and near Washington yesterday and last night.

William E. Moore, of Friendly, Md., died in Casualty Hospital from injuries suffered in an automobile accident on the South Maryland pike near Allentown, Md. Moore's car collided with a machine driven by Edward Briggs, 30, of Allentown. Briggs was held by Prince Georges County police.

Mrs. Teresa Gurnsky, 40, of 553 Fifteenth street northeast, was in Casualty Hospital with bruises suffered in an accident on Eighth street southwest. The car in which she was a passenger, driven by her husband, Stanley Gurnsky, collided with another operated by Samuel Minkoff, of the 200 block Twelfth street southeast, police said.

Mildred Quade, 13, of Hughesville, Md., was taken to Casualty Hospital with knee injuries received in an accident near Hyattsville. James C. Burch, 17, of Charlotte Hall, Md., was treated at the hospital for lacerations suffered in the same accident.

the President was first elected Governor of New York State in 1928.

"We are going to do everything we can in the United States, not only the people but the Government of the United States, to keep us out of war," the President said, bringing loud applause.

Ambassador Davis, who left Europe the last time in May, said "I don't see anything very promising," regarding conditions there.

Moffett said it was conceded by many persons Japan "sooner or later will have China down to Shanghai," and then a South China problem and the Philippines question may arise.

As chairma nof the board of the California-Texas Oil Co., a Standard Oil subsidiary, Moffett said his company was not abondoning any of its properties in China.

"We are doing business with both sides as usual," he said, adding he assumed any damage to the properties would be paid for by the offending nation.

He said China had been "going along in a real period of prosperity" when the Japanese invasion started in mid-August. With modernization and stabilization progressing, he predicted "if let alone" China probably would have experienced a five or six year boom.

How long China could hold out against Japan, he said, depended on the continued furnishing of supplies from other countries.

"A breaking up of the centralized government of China, which is one aim of Japan," he said, "would result in spreading vandalism and banditry in the interior, making it easier for Japan to conduct a war of conquest."

Moffett said he would sail for Europe early next month.

Aerial Conquest of the Oceans Precipitates Economic War

By the Associated Press.

In the sheltered harbors and on the airdromes of six continents the winged argosies of modern commerce come and go these days, scarcely heeded by a world grubbing for its bread.

But in the chancelleries of the world powers and in the Wall streets of America, Europe and Asia those airplanes are instruments of a new economic warfare.

The goal is supremacy in the air.

The profits are threefold: prestige, trade and national security.

As great airplanes drone across the wastes of the stormy North Atlantic, heralds of tomorrow's winged merchantmen, factories in both the Eastern and Western Hemispheres are working around the clock to fabricate flying machines capable of establishing and maintaining leadership in the air.

Not since the days of America's oak-ribbed Clipper ships, rail down under their loads of canvas, has this country attained the position of leadership on the ocean trade routes which it has now.

The United States is alone in the Pacific, but it will not be for long. Great Britain wants to span the world's biggest ocean with her flying boats. Japan's merchant armada of the air is expanding.

Over the North Atlantic four nations are bidding for business: America, Great Britain, France and Germany. Others may follow. Trade they desire, and prestige, but the plotting of new air routes is a hand-and-glove partnership between commerce and the military.

If a nation can carry orchids by wing, it can carry bombs on the same route.

Close to 250,000 miles of transport airways are woven into a spider-web network over continents and oceans. It is a matter of days instead of weeks from London to Australia. China of the wooden plow is criss-crossed by transport lines. Airplanes wing on regular schedule between Lima and Buenos Aires.

The aerial conquest of the seas precipitated an economic war, and the clatter of riveting hammers in the world's aircraft factories is the voice of its cannonading.

The Atlantic is the plum of the ocean air routes. Prestige, commerce and national security, three items which have occasioned wars and made and wrecked empires through the history of peoples, are the prizes being fought for.

78,000 Are Seeking 21,000 PWA Homes

A demand 300 per cent beyond the supply for the 21,000 modern family dwellings erected by PWA was reported yesterday by Secretary Howard L. Ickes.

More than 78,000 families have registered for the low-rent houses built in slum areas with $134,000,000 of public funds. The program is being carried on in 35 cities.

Leading all projects in the number of families applying for accommodations is the gigantic Williamsburg houses development in New York City, where 20,000 have applied for 1,622 available dwellings.

Projects in Atlanta, Atlantic City and Miami are 100 per cent filled, according to Howard A. Gray, director of housing. In Chicago, registrants outnumber houses 7 to 1; Philadelphia, 6 to 1, and similar popularity has been recorded wherever the low-rent homes are available.

Reserve Board Will Maintain 'Easy Money'

To Free 300 Millions of Sterilized Gold, Buy U. S. Securities.

000,000 of gold from its $1,370,000,000 sterilized metal supply. The Treasury will issue that sum of gold certificates to the Federal Reserve banks and will be credited with a $300,000,000 deposit on the banks' books. The money will go into the Treasury's general fund, from which money was withdrawn originally to purchase and "sterilize" the metal. As it is spent it will flow into commercia banks. The operation takes the pressure off the money market for the Treasury's deficit financing demands.

Called "Usual Policy."

"This action," the open market committee said, "is in conformity with the usual policy of the system to facilitate the financing of orderly marketing of crops and of autumn trade. Together with the recent reductions of discount rates at the several Federal Reserve banks, it will enable the banks to meet readily any increased seasonal demands for credit and currency and contribute to the continuation of easy credit conditions."

The banks' excess reserves now aggregate about $750,000,000 and the gold operation announced yesterday will add $300,000,000 to that total. However, fall and Christmas currency and credit demands will normally cut heavily into the supply.

The board indicated its desire to keep the surplus reserves at about the present level. Whether $400,000,000 or $600,000,000 or some other amount is necessary to care for the increased money and credit demand, the board has, through the gold operation, a $300,000,000 start on meeting the extra demand. The remainder will be provided through the purchase of Government securities in the open market, thereby releasing more money.

Tight Credit "Anticipated."

While Reserve officials asserted there had been no appreciable tightening of credit yet, they said it had been anticipated recently because of a belief the present excess reserves in the banks soon would disappear when the expected increased money demand materialized. The market always anticipates an event, it was said, but the Reserve Board's action yesterday was intended to show the event in this case would not be permitted to come about.

The program has nothing to do with the Government bond market, it was pointed out, but is concerned only with the money market. However, the opinion was expressed that it also will help the capital market. It will discourage, officials said, the liquidation of short-term Government obligations.

The planned open market operations were characterized as entirely different from those of last April, when the board bought Government bonds in order to maintain "orderly conditions" at a time when banks were selling the securities and prices were falling. In the contemplated operations only short-term obligations, notes and bills, will be purchased.

The release of inactive gold does not mean any cessation in the sterilization program, it was made clear. Incoming gold will be purchased by the Treasury and placed in the inactive account as heretofore. The sterilization program was started last winter when the influx of gold was creating such a huge reserve in this country that fears of wild credit inflation became acute. The gold is purchased with money borrowed from the money market, and such borrowing reduces funds available for lending for other purposes.

Treasury officials said the freeing of the $300,000,000 in gold probably will have the effect of reducing future Treasury borrowings or of cutting down the public debt, now about $37,000,000,000. The deficit for the current fiscal year now stands at about $430,000,000.

Attending the conference here were the following, representing the Federal Reserve Board and the 12 Federal Reserve banks:

Chairman Marriner S. Eccles, Ronald Ransom, Joseph A. Broderick, M. S. Szymczak, John K. McKee and Chester C. Davis, of the Reserve Board, and George L. Harrison, New York; William A. Day, San Francisco; William McC. Martin, St. Louis; B. A. McKinney, Dallas, and John S. Sinclair, Philadelphia, representing the banks.

The judges prefer blondes, it seems. They picked Miss Bette Cooper, of Bertrand Island, N. J., as the queen of American beauties at the Atlantic City battle of loveliness. She is being crowned by Rose V. Coyle (remember her?), last year's winner.

Father Sends 'Miss America' Back to School

Offers of Fame and Money Rejected for a Course in Voice Culture.

By the United Press.

Atlantic City, N. J., Sept. 12.—Miss America of 1937, beauteous Bette Cooper, of Hackettstown, N. J., turned down fame and fortune today to return to a college classroom to train her voice.

After officials of the Atlantic City beauty contest, photographers and reporters had waited two hours for the first professional appearance of the blue-eyed blonde who was crowned beauty queen last night, her father stunned the gathering with the announcement his daughter would not go through with plans for an immediate professional career. Instead, she will return to the Centenary Collegiate Institute at Hackettstown, a junior college, to complete a two-year course.

No Precedent.

It was the first time that an Atlantic City beauty contest winner had refused to accept all the awards that went with the crown.

Miss Cooper's choice meant that she had renounced a five-day contract at the Steel Pier; a trip to Hollywood by plane for a screen test; a six-week contract in vaudeville; a $1,000 Persian lamb coat.

A professional career, said Le Brun Cooper, father of Miss America and an employe of the New Jersey highway department, "is too strenuous for Bette."

"I prefer she model for magazine covers or something of that type." Cooper told George D. Tyson, executive director of the contest.

Limelight Switched.

While much of the limelight originally focused on the tall streamlined beauty queen passed to Alice Emerick, of Fort Worth, Tex., the second place winner, Tyson announced that he still considered Miss Cooper "the real Miss America."

Miss Cooper entered the contest as "Miss Bertrand Island, N. J." She won the title from 48 other contestants. Dr. Robert Durham, who examined her after the contest, said he found her in need of rest and prescribed medicine for her.

Miss Emerick, as "Miss Texas," rose to the occasion when the winner failed to appear and announced she would take advantage of the one-year scholarship at a New York singing, dancing and dramatic school, offered to the second place winner.

WIN $100,000.00 1st PRIZE

THIS IS A SAMPLE CARTOON

(It is used only for the purpose of explaining how you can enter and win in this contest. Read the explanation below.)

YOU SUPPLY THE REPLY FOR THE EMPTY BALLOON

HERE is what you do to win in this contest. Just study the conversation in the cartoon, and then YOU SUPPLY THE REPLY FOR THE EMPTY BALLOON.

For instance, in the SAMPLE cartoon above, Mary is being asked for advice.

Mary's reply might be:
"Old Golds. They hold their ash better. Nobody'll burn your tablecloth."

Or, Mary might say:
"Old Golds! Smokers seldom drop ashes when they smoke Old Golds."

Mary might say:
"Get Old Golds. They're always fresh. They'll please everybody."

There are so many things that Mary could reply that it seems almost needless to give any more examples. For instance, Mary might very well make any of the following three replies:

"My choice is Old Golds. They're always fresh, always Double-Mellow."

"Get Old Golds. Their double Cellophane package keeps them wonderfully fresh."

"Either buy several brands or get Old Golds. Old Golds please everybody."

There is nothing hard about this contest. Almost anybody can think of dozens of things that Mary would reply. And it's the same with all of the Official Cartoons in this contest. Just study the picture and the conversation and supply your own, original reply for the blank balloon. That's all there is to it.

Under each of the Official Cartoons you will find suggestions to help you write the missing conversation for the empty balloon.

Do not use more than 12 words for each answer

HERE'S HOW YOU WIN!

The sample cartoon printed at the left will give you the idea of this contest. It will show you what to do to win.

You'll note that the girl at the left in the cartoon is saying, "Say, Mary, I wonder what kind of cigarettes I should serve at my bridge party?" Then you'll notice that the balloon for the other girl's reply is blank.

The idea of the contest is for you to supply the reply, or remark; in other words, the missing conversation for the balloon that is blank.

Anybody can think of an appropriate reply that Mary might make. If you'll read the explanation below the Sample Cartoon you'll find several different kinds of replies.

West Virginians Hold Reunion In Washington

300 Gather in Rock Creek Park for Fried Chicken and Speeches.

About five years ago Mrs. Rhoda M. Fink, who left West Virginia, State of her birth, several years ago to live in Silver Spring, thought she'd like to see some of her old neighbors once in a while.

She not ony thought—she acted. And yesterday a warm September sun smiled upon one of Rock Creek Park's spacious glades, showing the vivacious Mrs. Fink surrounded by more than 300 natives of her State, with a good company of Virginians, Marylanders and Washingtonians there to make the gathering merrier.

It was, Mrs. Fink said, the third annual Virginia-West Virginia-Maryland reunion.

Not only the size of the crowd and the apparent good time all were having pleased the founder. She took particular pride in the presence of one of the most distinguished of West Virginians—former Gov. John J. Cornwell.

Praises Hospitality.

Cornwell was there to "meet old neighbors," enjoy the country fried chicken and make the assembly a speech.

"You Virginians and Marylanders are famous for your hospitality," he declared, "and there are good people everywhere. But I am here to say that nowhere have I met people so straightforward and so sincere in their hospitality as the people of West Virginia."

But while West Virginia was best represented both in the oratory and in the number of delegates to the reunion, it was Maryland hospitality that dominated the day. Washintgon Irving Cleveland, who lives in nearby Maryland, was chairman of the reunion committee, and members of the reunion association now living in Howard and Montgomery counties in Maryland were hosts.

Most of the visitors, Mrs. Fink explained, attended reunions last year and the year before. But yesterday's assembly was the largest on record. For one thing, the weather was the most favorable any reunion had enjoyed, and then the reunion organization was growing from year to year.

"When we first started out," said Mrs. Fink, "there were just a few of us. In fact, I began by talking about a reunion with a few West Virginians I knew."

Contacted 600 Newspapers.

Gradually these friends became so interested in seeing folks from home that they actively joined with Mrs. Fink in planning the first reunion. Personal invitations were sent out, and notices forwarded to the newspapers.

Last year the committee acquired the leadership of Cleveland, and efforts to bring here as many residents of the three States as possible were expanded. Cleveland said he got the names of 600 newspapers in Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia, and sent them requests to print notices of the coming reunion. The notices also carried a line about the importance of bringing fried chicken and other picnic foods.

The results were surprisingly good yesterday, Cleveland thought.

One man who traveled 250 miles to be present looked over the scene of reunionists busy eating and said:

"I declare, the way the fried chicken's going everybody is having a wonderful time—and see that gray-haired man over there? That's my father shaking a drumstick at an old neighbor from West Virginia he hasn't seen for 40 years."

Bridge

Trump Conservation.

There is one type of mistake at Bridge which can be described only by the word "naive." I refer to the occasions when declarer obviously says to himself: "I'll draw just one trump and then stop." This may be a very good policy when the declarer has rigid control of the hand, but it is not so good when applied to a hand such as the following:

South, dealer.
North-South vulnerable.

	♠ A 10 6 5 ♡ J 9 8 3 ◇ Q 7 4 2 ♣ Q
♠ K 9 8 3 2 ♡ A 4 ◇ 10 9 ♣ K 10 6 3	North West East South	♠ Q 7 4 ♡ 6 5 ◇ K J 8 3 ♣ J 8 4 2
	♠ J ♡ K Q 10 7 2 ◇ A 6 5 ♣ A 9 7 5

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	1 ♠	2 ♡	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	4 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

West opened the ten of diamonds which declarer allowed to ride to his own Ace. A survey of losing tricks must have revealed that it would be necessary to ruff declarer's three losing clubs in dummy. Declarer properly "reasoned" that only three of dummy's trumps would be required for this process and that, therefore, he could well afford to draw one round. If that was his thought, it was extremely ingenious. On the lead of the heart King, West hopped right up with his Ace, and cannily returned his remaining trump.

From that time on, declarer found himself struggling against insuperable obstacles. He could not establish a diamond trick, nor a spade outside of the Ace and, though he ruffed two clubs in dummy, was eventually forced to concede one club and two diamonds, in addition to the heart Ace.

It would be difficult to find a more easily played hand than this one, but I have noticed that it is these very hands that cause grief. Declarer was probably obsessed with the idea that West's opening diamond lead indicated that he was seeking diamond ruffs. But why should that have affected the play? Declarer could well afford to concede two diamond tricks, and certainly should not have cared whether they were lost naturally or to ruffs.

The obvious crux of the hand was not to be left with losing clubs, hence a straight cross-ruff of clubs and spades was clearly indicated.

All probabilities in Jo-Jotte are affected in some degree by the factor of the draw and the chance that the hand will be improved by the addition of the three cards yet to come. It is a fallacy to place any dependence upon the cards that may be drawn. Whatever a player's chance of improving the hand may be, he must remember that his opponent has an equally good chance. Fundamentally the contracting must be based on the merits of the six cards seen originally. If they are better than the opponent's six cards, then it is probable that after three cards have been added to each hand by the draw the relative value of the two hands will remain the same, and the hand which was better originally will still be better at the end.

16 on Sinking Ship Saved in High Seas

Halifax, N. S., Sept. 12 (U.P.).—The crew of the 275-ton steam trawler Lemberg, which foundered on the northeast bar of Sable Island early today, was rescued tonight by lifeboats from a nearby life-saving station.

The rescue boat battled high wind and seas for hours before they reached the stranded ship and took off Capt. Thorlacksson and a crew of 15. The trawler, owned by the National Fish Co., was abandoned. It was fishing out of Halifax when it was forced ashore in a 40-mile gale.

Beer Gives Alarm As Building Falls

New York, Sept. 12 (AP).—If the beer tap hadn't gasped and gone dry in Pete Cominskey's barroom tonight, there might have been some funerals thereabouts.

The beer ran out at 8 o'clock. Cominskey went to the basement to tap another keg. He found the plaster in the ceiling raining down. He called police. They ordered the customers out of the bar, housed on the first floor of a four-story brick building, otherwise empty.

From 8 o'clock until 11 the building teetered and quivered and then, with a sigh, it fell.

Sept. 26 Is Proclaimed Gold Star Mothers Day

Hyde Park, N. Y., Sept. 12 (AP).—A proclamation was issued today by President Roosevelt setting aside Sunday, September 26, as Gold Star Mothers Day.

Issued annually under a Congressional resolution in memory of those who "suffered the supreme sacrifice of motherhood in the loss of their sons and daughters in the World War," it calls on the people and Government officials to display the flag on that day.

It also urges the people to hold appropriate meetings in their homes, churches and other suitable places "as a public expression of the affection and reverence of the people of the United States for the American gold star mother."

Pilot Burned to Death After Plane Nose-Dives

Kenvil, N. J., Sept. 12 (AP).—Floyd Hoagland, 26, of Kenvil, burned to death today in an airplane that nose-dived and crashed just after it had taken off in a field near the foot of Mine hill. Alone and strapped in the cockpit, Hoagland was unable to free himself when the wreckage took fire.

...AND OF COURSE WE IMPROVED AMOCO-GAS, TOO!

An improved and enlarged refinery . . . new equipment . . . new processes . . . we've announced all this in the past few weeks. We've told how these improvements enable us to build-in greater value in American Oil Company products. But we've saved the best part of the story till last—the story of the new Amoco-Gas. It's an important story. And here it is:

AMOCO-GAS has always been the world's finest motor fuel—the very finest. But recently from the workshop of Science came word of a new and history-making triumph. Science had won another great victory in its struggle to wrest even bigger values from crude oil. New, revolutionary, radically different refining processes had been invented. At a cost of many millions, American Oil Company designed and installed new equipment . . . incorporated these new patented processes into what was already the world's greatest and most modern refining unit.

And as a result, the new Amoco-Gas is better than ever before. In smoothness, performance, economy — in everything — it's better. It's the greatest Amoco-Gas in our history! And that's saying a lot — because Amoco's history has been a glorious one. Amoco-Gas revolutionized the automotive and gasoline industries when it was first introduced . . . made possible the modern high compression motor. And now it makes history again.

See for yourself that the new Amoco surpasses anything you've ever used! Fill your tank with the new Amoco-Gas. Then get out on the open highway. It will be an experience such as you've never had before! And the new Amoco-Gas actually costs less in the long run . . . it costs a little more per gallon, but much less per mile! The new Amoco-Gas is the greatest in our history. Always the best—now better than ever! Try it today! AMERICAN OIL COMPANY

Inexpensive But Futile.

The best that can be said for the plan President Roosevelt is said to be considering as a way of carrying out the unemployment census recently voted by Congress is that it will involve relatively little expense. But that it will serve any constructive purpose is very much to be doubted.

The plan in question calls for the use of the Nation's election machinery. On a specified date, those with no jobs or only part-time jobs would be asked to appear in polling places or at the offices of election inspectors and fill out blanks provided for the purpose. The presumption is that these officials can easily take care of the added burden this census will impose upon them and, moreover, the unemployed, already accustomed as voters to going to polling places, will not be called upon to do anything unusual.

Both of these points are possibly well taken. But on at least two counts the proposed census is likely to prove futile and meaningless. In the first place there is no certainty whatever that all of the unemployed will take the trouble to register. On the contrary there is every reason to believe that many of them will not, even if not ill or indisposed or for any other urgent reason unable to reach the designated registration offices.

Despite enormous publicity and the large element of self-interest involved, millions of workers were dilatory in registering with the Social Security Board. There is no similar incentive for the unemployed to take the trouble to fill out an unemployment questionnaire.

In the second place, even if a very large percentage of the workless dutifully followed out the President's bidding, the resulting data would prove nothing. They would be subject to seasonal discounts and would become meaningless a week or a month after they had been compiled.

There is, to be sure, no doubt that more complete figures regarding unemployment are badly needed. But the emphasis should be on continuous data that provide a picture of the situation from day to day and month to month. From this point of view the statistics compiled by the WPA, the United States Employment Service and the State systems of unemployment insurance which require registration with the employment exchanges, as many of them do, are, even in their present inadequate form, far more serviceable than any results that can be achieved by a voluntary one-day census could possibly be.

The figures which the existing agencies are in a position to supply at regular intervals could profitably be supplemented by a reliable national count of unemployment. But the most effective way that can be done is by decreasing the period between national censuses. In the present rapidly changing state of affairs a ten-year period is far too long. Were it halved a much better picture of the constantly modified picture of American economic life would be available.

Phi Beta Kappa At G. W.

George Washington University has published plans for two buildings to be erected during the coming year. A library and a hall for its School of Government are contemplated, the first made possible by the generosity of Abram Lisner and the other the gift of an anonymous donor. Desirable as these additions are, they rank only second as an index of G. W.'s development.

Last week the university was granted a charter by the council of Phi Beta Kappa, oldest and most respected scholastic fraternity in the land. This is a notable honor. Recognition by the fraternity is eagerly sought by collegiate institutions. But while many apply few are chosen. The requirements are far from perfunctory. Membership in the Association of American Universities, itself a hallmark of excellence, is considered the first requisite. Next, an invitation to submit an application must be received from the Phi Beta Kappa committee on qualifications. This done, a searching inspection of the applicant institution's curriculum, faculty and general standards follows. When the findings are satisfactory, the application is forwarded to the fraternity senate which, if favorably impressed, certifies it to the council for final action.

George Washington, on its first application, received not only the unanimous indorsement of the senate but far more than the necessary two-thirds vote of the council. Indeed, in receiving its charter the university was especially cited for its "excellence in liberal arts and sciences, particularly in the quality of its product, faculty, curriculum, library, equipment and financial conditions." This confirms a belief held in and around Washington for a considerable time, namely, that George Washington is one of America's outstanding institutions of higher education.

Only 130 universities and colleges hold Phi Betta Kappa charters. It is a matter for warm congratulation to President Marvin, his trustees and colleagues that their institution is one of the favored few and the first of the Nation's Capital to enjoy the distinction.

The League Assembly Meets.

The Assembly of the League of Nations, which convenes at Geneva today for its eighteenth regular annual session, faces an unmistakably bleak outlook.

The problems on the League's agenda include those of the utmost importance to the world. The undeclared war in the Far East, the international turmoil centering around Spain, the recrudescence of piracy in the Mediterranean, the hopeless outlook for disarmament, the plight of the refugees, the struggle for raw materials—these and other grave international problems of the day are up for discussion at Geneva. But no one expects, least of all League leaders themselves, that any far-reaching action will be taken at Geneva with respect to any of these issues.

Since the Ethiopian debacle, the League's prestige has been seriously impaired and with it its capacity to act with vigor in matters affecting the peace of the world. Instead of being the source and center of international action, it now occupies only a place along the periphery.

The Spanish problem was, by action of Great Britain and France, largely removed from within its jurisdiction and turned over to a special body meeting at London. The piracy problem is being grappled with by the nations fronting the Mediterranean. The League is certain to give a sympathetic hearing to China's case against Japan. But it is probable that the Geneva organization will on this occasion be very much less active in opposing the aggressor than it was in 1932.

Despite such striking evidence of weakness, the fact nevertheless remains that the great majority of the nations of the world still cling to the League and still send their representatives to its meetings. Nor is this merely a bow of deference to a great if vanishing ideal—the ideal of international order and collective security. In a world where Realpolitik rules the day few nations have the energy or the inclination for such a gesture. They belong to the League and act in, if not through, it because it continues to have a real function to perform.

Now, as in happier times, the League represents the most elaborate and potentially the most effective mechanism ever devised for the peaceful ordering of the affairs of nations. As such it can still be used, though at the present juncture there is little likelihood that it will be. And even now it continues to have an enormous value as the sounding board of world opinion.

In this connection there is a very real potential significance in the decision of Secretary Hull to file with the League a copy of the statement of principles guiding the United States in its international relations which he issued July 16.

That statement, with its emphasis on noninterference in the internal affairs of other nations, the peaceful settlement of international disputes, the sanctity of treaties, the faithful observance of international relations and so on, is in absolute harmony with the League Covenant. There is every reason to believe, therefore, that the Hull pronunciamento will meet with the enthusiastic approval of the Geneva organization, as it already has met with the approval of the individual League members.

But the League Covenant, it should also be pointed out, goes further than merely to expound the ideal bases of international relations. It proclaims the idea that any threat of war is of concern to all nations; it calls for collective action to meet such threats.

With this thesis the United States is not officially prepared to agree. We are not a member of the League. We are not bound by the terms of the Covenant. But Mr. Hull's action in transmitting the statement of July 16 clearly indicates that the moral support of the United States will be vouchsafed the League in any constructive effort it may make on behalf of peace in Europe or the Far East. Indeed, such a stand was foreshadowed by Mr. Hull when, in this very statement, he declared:

> We avoid entering into alliances or entangling commitments, but we believe in co-operative effort by peaceful and practicable means in support of the principles hereinbefore stated.

Field Day At School.

When the bell rings in New England schools this fall, the little Yankees may not be so loath to give up their vacation freedom for the duller occupation of learning the three R's. For the old routine of reading, 'riting, and 'rithmetic has lately taken on unaccustomed pep and variety. It's the teachers, God bless 'em, who are the classroom cutups these days. Note the injection of extra-curricula spice in the case of Mrs. Hazel Bucklyn and Miss Ellen Innes, of Groton, Conn.

When the boys and girls of Center Groton School assembled this week, they found Mrs. Bucklyn and Miss Innes presiding simultaneously over the same class. This double-header was caused by the fact that the committeeman for this school district and the board of education both contended that each was the proper appointing agency.

Two State troopers, called in by the superintendent, served to enhance the colorful aspect and make it a red letter day in the life of the little white schoolhouse. In fact, this show bids fair to rival the recent one at Saugus, Mass., when Miss Isabelle Hallin, discharged teacher, walked out of the high school there and into a Hollywood screen test. My, my, never a dull moment any more except, of course, at those deplorable intervals when textbooks hold the center of the stage.

But the pupils of Saugus and Groton ain't heard nothing yet. Another New England city has gone them one better when it comes to making school-going a pleasure. Hereafter there will be fewer report cards among the junior high pupils of Hartford, Conn. Thus the local superintendent of schools, Mr. Fred D. Wish, jr., gives a new and happy meaning to the expression "wishful thinking."

The Local Budget.

Commissioner Hazen is entirely correct in declaring that Washingtonians are "in no mood" to consider an increase in taxes next year. His statement was intended to reassure local business groups which lost no time in registering their dissatisfaction with the impossible figure of $68,000,000 which represents the sum of the 1939 estimates recently submitted by the various municipal departments of the District. By contrast the current budget of $46,000,000 is modest, yet new levies were needed to bring even that into approximate balance.

The business reaction was as welcome as it was appropriate. The theory of budget-making presumes that administrative agencies will first ask for what they regard as ideal. Against these Utopian requests are weighed the criticisms of those who have to foot the bill. Between the two viewpoints a fair compromise may theoretically be expected.

One of the criticisms of a departmental request made by the businessmen, however, seemed mistaken. An official of the Board of Trade, speaking of the Board of Public Welfare's application for a 60 per cent increase in appropriation, declared that the figure seemed excessive since "such a need has not been recognized in the past." He overlooks the fact that the Federal government must reduce its uncovered relief expenditures. But continuing unemployment makes it plain that as Federal relief funds are curtailed, some of the slack must be made up by States and municipalities. Among these last, Washington is no exception.

But by and large, the businessmen's anxiety over the skyrocketing proclivities of the District budget are shared by the rest of the city, including the Commissioners, who have named a special committee of experts to study the problem. Every possible source of revenue in Washington is being explored. But with the detrimental effects of the new District revenue act still unknown, the committee can scarcely urge any increase in the burden of local taxpayers. And the possibilities of discovering other sources of income appear slight.

If this be the case, the District faces two alternatives—stern denial of the many reasonable requests for expansion and improvement of the city plant, or borrowing. Commissioner Hazen indicates a preference for the former. At best, however, this may be but a temporary solution. Needed capital improvements cannot be forever postponed.

Then will a bond issue ultimately be necessary? Besides requiring an act of Congress to authorize it, such a move would mean the end of the District's enviable pay-as-you-go policy. It is said that only one other city in the country, and that with a population of less than 10,000, still pays as it goes. Probably no sizable business here does so in the case of capital improvements. The law forbids the utilities to finance capital improvements out of a single year's receipts.

Washington, no longer a sleepy village, may be slated to adopt the deferred financing practices which are now the rule rather than the exception. But it is a step which is far easier to take than to retrace.

"What would be the most practical way of punishing a man who loves two women?" asks a moralist. Tell the two women.

A reactionary is just an old fogey who keeps asking the embarrassing question, "Where is the money coming from?"

Nowadays an apprehended criminal is crazy if he doesn't hire a psychiatrist to prove he's crazy.

Curbing River Acid.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer.

One phase of Federal work relief has been especially advantageous to residents of the Ohio Valley. The Federal Government, in cooperation with the States, has sealed more than 47,000 openings in some 13,500 abandoned coal mines in Ohio, Kentucky, Pennsylvania and West Virginia since 1933.

From these abandoned mines had been pouring a vast amount of sulphuric acid which found its way into the Ohio, the Monongahela, and the Alleghany rivers. According to a report made recently to the American Chemical Society, each year 3,000,000 tons of the acid had been flowing into the Ohio River from unsealed abandoned mines.

The presence of sulphuric acid in the river water, besides affecting adversely the water supply of more than 5,000,000 residents of the valley, is estimated to have caused a direct financial loss of about $10,000,000 annually through corrosion and increased cost of water treatment. The program of mine sealing, which included also the division of surface waters and the restricting of fresh air in the mines so as to minimize the seepage of the acid, was reported to have reduced the production of sulphuric acid by this source from 36.4 per cent to 15.2 per cent.

Federal funds also have been allotted to Indiana, Maryland, Tennessee and Alabama to finance mine sealing projects. In view of the work thus provided and the broad benefits arising from it, this program represents a singularly beneficial use of Federal funds.

For A New Party.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: How long must it take for this beloved country of ours to awaken to the fact that the present trend of our political and social economics is taking us swifty to ruin?

Isn't it about time for the formation of a new political party drawn from those of us who realize that out of the prevailing welter of alignments—Democrats, Republicans, New Dealers, Progressives, Farm Labor, Laborites, Socialists, Communists, etc.—there are millions who are ready to support a coalition designed to stop once and for all the present blind race for destruction of so many of the principles and ideals that made this country in so short a time, the greatest and most powerful in all history?

A good name has already been suggested by one of the Nation's keenest economic observers—"The Constitutional Progressive Party." Its objectives would be along constitutional and conservative lines suited to the nautral and healthy progressive needs of our social and political life.

Let the new party for the first time in the history of party politics, come out boldly against the ever growing power of irresponsible labor organizations and at least advocate Federal laws to effectively curb what is fast becoming the Nation's greatest peril—strikes. Let it advocate the establishment of a tribunal, second only to the United States Supreme Court, whose function would be to arbitrate all difference between labor and capital and to render decisions effective for from three to five years or more, making it prohibitive to order strikes when and where arbitration agreements are made.

Due to the many cases which would necessarily come up for consideration, the new party would advocate directing and empowering the Federal and State courts to grant injunctions against strikes until such time as each particular case can come before the tribunal.

There are, of course, many other great and consistent objectives necessary to be advocated and outlined by the new party, and it does seem that now or never is the time for true, responsible Americans to take hold of affairs and save us from social and political chaos.

Too Many New Stamps.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am in hearty agreement with "Philatelist" and his statements, but I will go a little further than he did. I believe it is high time that the stamp collectors banded together to stop the constant issuing of new stamps every time somebody opens a new gasoline station or hamburger joint.

The Postoffice, of course, will make a beautiful showing with the money taken in by sale of new stamps, but they will kill the goose that laid the golden eggs if they are not careful. The collectors and dealers do not want a new stamp every five minutes, it means too much of an outlay in money to be buying up all the new stamps.

Now that things have started, every State in the Union will have to have a stamp of their own, or else they will sulk. Why on earth should the New York Fair have a set of stamps all their own? It will be nothing but an enlarged country fair at that. True, the Chicago Fair had stamps issued for them, but even though they did, now it's a case of because Johnnie had some, Mary must have some, too.

Another joke is that they claim the bureau cannot put out beautiful stamps, that is, bi-colored or multi-colored ones. Well, if they can't turn the stamp over to a private engraving firm and let them see what they can do. Other countries put out beautifully colored stamps, so why can't we?

And now I am waiting for someone to say. Well, you don't have to buy the stamps. Well, perhaps I don't, but neither does Mrs. Jones and her daughter have to buy the new hats that make the girls look top-heavy, but they will feel a little out of place if they didn't.

Come on, fellow collectors, let's get together against this wholesale issuing of stamps, especially against stamps like the Virginia Dare, Northwestern and the other junk. Let's use our stamp money to catch up on the older issues.

The Single Tax.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Stephen G. Rich, critic of the single tax, refuses to believe that "a taxation exactly equal to all economic rent will suffice for all the necessary expenses of governmental activity," and this is indeed a wise conclusion on his part when the rapidly increasing burden of taxation, resulting from New Deal legislation at Washington, is taken into account. But Henry George's philosophy was formulated in comparatively normal times, and did not anticipate present-day governmental extravagances or New Deal socialistic experiments. The annual value of economic ground rent has been approximated at $14,000,000,000, which is amply adequate for all regular expenses of government, national and local, under normal conditions.

It might interest Mr. Rich to know that 40 years ago the burden of criticism against the single tax was to the effect that it would collect so much more revenue than the Government needed, that this embarrassment of riches would certainly lead to extravagance and corruption. This conclusion was so important that it resulted in dividing the single taxers into two classes, "limited" and "unlimited." Limited single taxers held that the Government should collect only the amount of revenue that was really needed for governmental expenses, whereas the unlimited school held that economic rent being a fruit of the community, and therefore belonging to the community, should be collected in full.

Henry George, of course, led the unlimited single taxers and he used to say that all of economic rent should be collected even though some of it should be thrown into the sea rather than to leave it as a factor responsible for the worst of all monopolies. It will also be well for Mr. Rich to take into account the fact that the abolition of all taxes excepting a single tax upon ground rent will very greatly reduce the cost of Government.

Appearance Of The City.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Col. Sultan is on record as having stated that Washington is lagging behind other cities in the matter of underground and overhead contraptions.

On the contrary: Washington is way ahead of those cities which have fallen in grace in this respect. It is a residential city, and the few pedestrians in the vicinity of the three circles scheduled for devastation can take care of themselves; let those riding in automobiles do likewise.

How many of the 400 killed on Labor Day met their fate at either of the circles referred to?

If necessary, establish them downtown in the business section which is void of landscape. To get an idea of how the city will appear in the event of this preposterous scheme being put into effect, take a glimpse at the cockeyed overpasses in Brookland.

All we pedestrians ask for is a little more time in which to cross the streets and protection from careless fast drivers. Save the appearance of the city at all hazards, and thank the Commissioners for giving the citizens an opportunity to express their views on this vital subject.

Chicago's Carving of Marquette

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Several newspaper clippings have reached me, telling of the feud that recently shook Chicago concerning the garb in which, 10 or so years ago, a sculptor clothed his carved image of Marquette on one of the pylons of Michigan Avenue Bridge.

The reports say and illustrations seem to show that the image of Marquette in question is wearing a Franciscan garb. What an outrage on the memory of the well-known Jesuit! And what a presumption on behalf of the Franciscans! Haven't enough myths been already woven around the name of Marquette? And haven't the Franciscans already more heroes in American mission history than they themselves realize? In either case, why add to the number?

Happily, for this historical error neither the Jesuits nor the Franciscans are to blame. It's the artist who blundered, provided the garb is really a Franciscan garb. This is not the first time, however, that an artist ascribed something to Marquette which later on was proved to be erroneous. Just witness the now exploded myth, so long cherished, that in 1673 Marquette "discovered" the Mississippi River, that he led the expedition which made this "discovery," and that he wrote the narrative of this expedition. To explode such myths is a disagreeable and thankless job, I can assure you. So let us not add another myth to Marquette's name by transforming him into a Franciscan. Let us correct the artist's error without delay.

But how shall we correct the error on Michigan Avenue Bridge? Ah, there's the rub. I have given the matter very serious thought; it really deserves it. Perhaps some way can be found, similar to the one hit upon by an artist who was asked to paint a picture of St. Francis of Assisi. Being both timid and tactful, he wanted to satisfy the demands of each of the three branches of the order founded by St. Francis—the Franciscans, the Conventuals, and the Capuchins. Accordingly he painted a picture that showed the saint lying in bed and the three garbs distinctive of each branch hanging on the wall nearby. No feud over garb this time!

After all is said and done, I vote for the suggestion made by Miss Helen Kinsella and other art students of Chicago. Leaving the figure of Marquette unmolested in its present garb, let us henceforth take the figure in a generic, not a specific, sense and refer to it as a symbol of missionary zeal in general, not as the image of any missionary in particular, meanwhile giving the figure of the layman the same sort of interpretation.

All I would change is the wording of the first line of the inscription accompanying the plaque. Instead of it reading, as it does now, "Jolliet—Father Marquette—La Salle—Tonti," I would make it read: "Laymen and Priests from Catholic France," allowing the rest of the inscription to remain as it is. In this way the work of art will not be marred, the fundamental idea of the artist will be preserved, the city of Chicago will save $200, and everybody will be happy and satisfied.

Great Military Commanders

There follows a letter published recently by the Montgomery Advertiser.

Editor of the Advertiser:

As Lieut. Col. Simpson has seen fit to issue his bulletin of "All-Time Great Commanders," may it not be well to review some similar previous estimates?

Here is Napoleon's: "Read over and over again the campaigns of Alexander, Hannibal, Caesar, Gustavus, Turenne, Eugene and Frederick. Make them your models. This is the only way to become a great general, and to master the secrets of the art of war."

* * *

Here is Hannibal's, as recorded by Livy: "Scipio Africanus was connected with the embassy, and an interview took place at Ephesus between him and Hannibal. In the course of a conversation which they had together, Scipio asked, 'Who was in his estimation the greatest general that had ever existed?' Hannibal replied, 'Alexander, King of the Macedonians, for at the head of an army inconsiderable in point of number, he routed innumerable hosts and penetrated into regions so remote that one could hardly hope to be able even to visit them as a traveler.' To the inquiry, 'Who was in his opinion the greatest general after Alexander?' he answered, 'Pyrrhus, as he was the first to apply the principles of camp-surveying, and was surpassed by none in the skillful choice of ground and arrangement of his posts; and in addition to these qualities was such a master of the art of acquiring popular favor, that, notwithstanding he was a foreign prince, the people of Italy preferred living under his government to remaining under that of the Roman Commonwealth, by which they had so long been ruled.' When asked 'Whom he regarded as the next greatest general the world had produced?' Hannibal answered unhesitatingly, 'Myself!' With a laugh he could not repress, Scipio then went on, 'What would you say if you had conquered ME?' 'In that case,' replied Hannibal, 'I should look upon myself as a greater general than Alexander, or Pyrrhus, or any other.'"

Some years ago a book, entitled "Greater Than Napoleon," was published by a British officer. It was a narrative of the career of Scipio Africanus, whom the author esteemed greater than the victor of Austerlitz.

Another British military authority, Sir Percy Sykes, presents this judgment: "No Asiatic conqueror in historical times has performed such feats of arms as these, and consequently none is entitled to the fame of Tamerlane. His achievements seemed almost to border on the superhuman."

Tamerlane, it may be noted, once swept through Russia, and could have taken Moscow and conquered the country had he found it worthwhile.

Why does Lieut. Col. Simpson reckon among the foremost American generals the conqueror in the greatest victory ever won on American soil—Andrew Jackson? Is it too much to say that the Battle of New Orleans was one of the decisive battles of history? Certainly its effect upon the spirit and temper of the American people was unique.

In comparing Frederick and Napoleon, let us take account of the results of time. Suppose that Napoleon's Empire had survived him, and that Frederick, coming after Napoleon, had come in conflict with its veteran armies, led by marshals vastly inferior, no doubt to the Emperor, but much superor to the courtier-fops who led the French to annihilation at Rosbach. We may well believe that one such defeat as he suffered from the Austrians might have ended Frederick's military enterprises; and, against the squares of the Guard, Ziethen's famous squadrons would have fared no better than the Mamelukes at the Pyramids, or the Household Brigade at Waterloo.

Now the Prussian army which Napoleon invariably overthrew, through many years, and under all conditions, was the magnificent engine of war which the great Frederick had left behind him. But whether led by Brunswick, Hohenlohe or Gneisenau and Blucher, they were never a match for the Emperor—a striking illustration of the truth of Napoleon's adage: "In war men are nothing; a man is everything."

Frederick was defeated by the Austrians at Kolin; by the Russians and Austrians at Kunersdorf; and surprised and defeated by the Austrians at Hochkirch.

No opponent ever surprised Napoleon. Here we recall Wellington's exasperated comment on the Waterloo campaign: "The fellow (Napoleon) had gained two days on me!" Before Waterloo, Napoleon was twice checked before gaining a decisive victory over the enemy who had inflicted this partial reverse, but never defeated, on anything like equal terms until his last campaign, when, no longer his old self, he undertook to defeat two armies on one battlefield in one day. Even so, he might have succeeded, but for traitorous and lagging subordinates. He certainly worsted Wellington, whose confession of defeat is recorded in his S O S message to the approaching Prussians, his distressful ejaculation, "Night or Blucher!" and his later observation on a hard-won victory in Spain, "If Boney had been there, he would have beaten us."

Lieut. Col. Simpson ranks Ludendorff first among military engineers. Did the Germans, during the World War, encounter obstacles comparable to those attacked, and, at any rate, partially overcome by Napoleon's engineers at the passage of the Beresina?

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Suspected Spy.

DURING THE PERIOD of emotional nonsense which followed the adoption of sanctions against Italy by the League of Nations there was quite a spy scare in Rome, and there was one particular spy, or suspect, whose activities were checked with great patriotic zeal by all the young and old bucks, military and diplomatic, who could break in on the play.

This spy, or suspect, was a medium-sized blonde with a racy, streamlined chassis, a light but highly attractive paint job and numerous changes of scenery. She was pointed out to me in the bar of the Ambassador Hotel my first day in town by Mr. Rota, the manager of the plant, a stylish little dude on the order of Adolphe Menjou, the motion-picture actor.

"See that woman in the leopard coat?" Mr. Rota whispered dramatically.

"Nice," I remarked. "Friend of yours?"

"Friend! No," he said. "She is a spy. I have my eye on her."

"Do you need any help?" I asked.

"No joking," Mr. Rota said. "She is a spy, and we are watching her night and day."

I said this was not bad work if you could get it, because this spy, or suspect, was something very special, but Mr. Rota told me that if I would just keep my eyes open I would see some of the finest counter-espionage the world had ever known. And for a fact, I did. This spy, or suspect, was said to be a German, and that tended to confuse things because the Germans were not at all interested in Abyssinia, which was the talk of all the officers in uniforms who were hanging around the hotel bars, and the German military attache in Rome had said they didn't much care whether they were allowed to send an observer or not. Their interest ran to Continental European warfare.

• • • •

Anyway, the Italians had her pegged for a German spy, and they checked her night and day with a patriotic devotion that was something to behold. She seemed to have plenty of money, for she dressed expensively and wore jewelry that was distinctly not five-and-ten, but she never had to lift a check for a meal or a drink in several weeks. There seemed to be great competition among the patriots of Rome for the duty of taking the German spy to lunch and cocktails and dinner and to the little night club which Mr. Rota conducted in the cellar of the Ambassador, by special permission of the government, in order that the foreigners in town should not think that all gayety had vanished before the threat of war's privations.

By and by most of the American journalists in town and their wives, who ran pretty much together socially, came to know the spy by sight, and they would sit around at night watching the play of wits in this game of life and death. Once in a while an American journalist would say, "If you all will excuse me I think I will go to the bar and do a little counter-espionage," and the little woman would say, "Over my dead body you will."

Our spy became quite an institution, with a stag-line reaching from here to there—colonels, majors, lieutenants in beautiful war costumes and civilians in mufti. There was never any lack of volunteers to ply her with spaghetti and wine in the hope of working her secret from her and sending her to the firing squad, although I believe all their efforts failed in the end.

• • • •

BUT THE PRINCIPAL AGENT of the counter-espionage was a young and graceful hand-kisser from the foreign office who threw himself into his work with a brave abandon that was really inspiring. He had at least half her dates, and you could see the eyes of the volunteers sitting on the sidelines enviously following him around the floor at night as he wrestled his subject through the measures of the dance, very close to his work, and obviously devoted to his duty, and, rather strangely, the bucks seemed to do most of the talking—which is a curious way to conduct counter-espionage—and whenever she would open her pretty trap to say a word, whatever it was, the patriot who had the honor of serving Mussolini and Italia at the moment would arch his neck and beam like a sunrise.

I am telling you, friends, this spy was really extra, and the time she showed up in the night club in the purple evening dress with no shoulder straps at all the patriots came a-running from far and near to keep an eye on her for the Duce. No Italian myself, and certainly no Fascist, I discovered I, too, was keeping an eye on her and feeling no pain, except, perhaps, an unworthy twinge of envy of the young bloke from the foreign office who could swish his tails doing that jack-knife bend and brushing the back of her fist with his little mustache like nothing you ever saw on the stage.

I understand that Mr. Rota is running a hotel in California now, and I wish I knew where, because I would like to ask him to fill me in on the fate of the beautiful spy. I wonder did that foreign office party ever marry his assignment. If so it was an overmatch. He wasn't half good enough for her.

On Reading

By William Lyon Phelps

Old Or New Books?

This is a question that everyone who loves reading and yet has a limited amount of time, must decide for himself. A famous man once said, "Every time a new book comes out, I read an old one." This would be literally impossible, but it is easy to see what he meant. We live in the twentieth century, in 1937; it would be foolish indeed never to read new novels, new essays, new books of science and art; but unless one has some knowledge of the great works of literature, one has no standards by which one can judge of the value of contemporary books. That is why children and young men and women should read as much of the best literature as possible; so that they will enter upon active life with a properly equipped mind.

• • • •

The author of Ecclesiastes in the Old Testament complained that too many new books were being written; what would he think now? And, if we compare the number of books that are appearing with the number that appeared two centuries ago we can ask the same question. Yet in the eighteenth century people in London were impressed by two things which seem to us of very small magnitude. One was the number of new books, the other was the tremendous roar of the crowded traffic of London, which to us in retrospect seems about as noisy as a Vermont churchyard.

• • • •

Relativity exists in all things; and Dr. Johnson, with his shrewd wisdom, discussed the question at the head of this article in words true today. On April 29, 1778, he said in conversation: "It has been maintained that this . . . teeming of the press in modern times is prejudicial to good literature, because it obliges us to read so much of what is of inferior value, in order to be in the fashion; so that better works are neglected for want of time, because a man will have more gratification of his vanity in conversation, from having read modern books, than from having read the best works of antiquity. But it must be considered that we have now more knowledge generally diffused; all our ladies read now, which is a great extension. Modern writers are the moons of literature; they shine with reflected light, with light borrowed from the ancients. Greece appears to me to be the fountain of knowledge; Rome of elegance."

A View Of Russia

Observer Reports Recent Frequent 'Purges' Indicate Party Rather Than National Crisis; Social Progress Noteworthy.

By Sherwood Eddy.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Moscow.

I RETURNED to Russia this summer for my thirteenth visit in the last twenty-five years—twice under the Czarist regime and eleven times under the present government. Our party first visited ancient Kiev. Proceeding through the rich Ukraine to Kharkov, as we visited the factories and collective farms it was perfectly evident why the Nazis have set their heart on this region so rich in grain and minerals.

As far as the eye could reach, clear to the horizon, were the enormous unfenced fields often of thousands of acres. The ripened grain was being harvested by modern agricultural machinery, in the production of which Russia now leads the world. After studying the industry and agriculture of the Ukraine we proceeded to Moscow, the hub and center of the whole U. S. S. R., now tense with strain in the present party crisis after the repeated trials, arrests and shootings. Then we visited beautiful Leningrad, with its palaces and art galleries of the Czars and scenes of the October revolution.

And this is what I found in Russia today: There is now a severe crisis in the Communist Party, but there is no national crisis in the U. S. S. R. The serried ranks of Soviet youth marching joyously in their sports parades in every city, the toiling masses in industry and collective agriculture, and the rank and file of the Red army of over 1,600,000 men were never more loyal, more satisfied nor more enthusiastic than they are today. If this is so, if nothing like 10 per cent of the population is disaffected or "counter revolutionary" or even suspected of Trotskyism, then I say emphatically there is no national crisis.

Masses Said Unaware Of Grave Party Crisis.

BUT WITH EQUAL emphasis I must maintain there is a grave party crisis, of which the broad masses are not aware. There is strain, tension and fear almost everywhere, especially in Moscow. This land of contradictions is neither all white nor all black, but rather drab and gray; neither heaven nor hell, but rather a mixture of good and evil, strenuously striving to build out of backward human material a whole new social order, in the first complete revolution ever attempted in all history.

Never was so many party and government officials, factory managers, and heads of departments dismissed, removed, or attacked in the press. Never were foreigners more unpopular, more suspect or more shunned. A bare 40 of them, among more than 5,000 Russians, were allowed standing room on the Red Square during the glorious sports parade of 40,000 rugged athletes held on July 12. If we could not stand in the square, we asked if we might observe the parade from the windows and balconies of our hotel above the street where the marchers would approach the square. No! These rooms must be locked.

After examining many contradictory witnesses, it appears to be true that some hundreds have been shot during recent months and some tens of thousands are in prison, or in exile, or have disappeared. A list of scores of leaders who have been removed or imprisoned lies before me. Soviet Russia is not, as idealistic liberals have thought, a romantic humanitarian experiment with delightful things like the care of children, equality for women, social insurance, model prisons, the abolition of prostitution, parks of culture and rest, and picturesque youth parades. It is war now.

Rights In Constitution Only Useful To 'Toilers.'

THE NEW constitution guarantees "freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of assemblies, freedom of street processions and demonstrations." These are "at the disposal of the toilers"—i. e., those who are loyal to Stalin and the party line. They are certainly not meant for their class enemies, for the hundreds who have been shot and for the thousands who have been imprisoned recently.

The word "liberty," though genuine, is used in an entirely different sense from that in which it is used under a bourgeois liberal constitution in America or France. No organized opposition is possible. The "purgings" of the party, which have been intermittent and almost continuous for the last decade, recently have become much more drastic, reducing the membership by one-third, from 3,000,000 to less than 2,000,000, or little more than 1 per cent of the total population.

This purging has almost taken the form of a witch-hunting campaign to root out all traces or even suspicion of "Trotskyism and counter revolution." If a factory, or government organ, is not fulfilling its quota of production, charges are hurled against the management. They are accused of sabotage, or disloyalty, or even treason. It is an easy opportunity for jealousy or envy, for fear or suspicion, to bring forward unfounded charges which often cannot be disproved. Many are afraid to take responsibility; some engineers are seeking to resign; labor discipline is often bad. Soon there is a vicious circle. Witch-hunting affects industry, while decreased production creates yet more suspicion and political purging.

Production in oil, coal, pig iron, blast furnaces, and even in light industry has been affected and many branches of industry are either behind the plan or, in some cases, lower than last year. It must be recognized, however, that the worst features are often emphasized by their policy of "self-criticism." Even when they are behind the plan in some cases they have made a gain.

Crisis Described As Least Tense Of Five.

I MUST REPEAT that this is a party and not a national crisis, and that it is not nearly so serious as several preceding crises. Speaking for himself, the writer has watched these people weather five serious crises during the last 20 years, and this is probably the least of them all.

The first was during the period of military communism in 1918-20. The second was the strategic retreat of the New Economic Policy, following 1921. The third was the great party struggle which came to a head in 1926-27. Stalin and the majority felt they had to maintain the party line, first against the left opposition of Trotsky, Zinoviev and Kaminev, and later against the right opposition of Bucharin, Rykov, and Tomsky.

The fourth crisis, following "the offensive against the villages," or war on the kulaks, resulted in the "difficulties" of the winter of 1932-33, which ordinary bourgeois mortals called a famine in the Ukraine. The fifth and last is the party crisis of 1937. Even if, during the past year, some hundreds have been shot and some thousands have been imprisoned, or exiled, this is as nothing compared to the first, second, or third crises mentioned above.

Within a few days, when we were in Russia, the people were said to have subscribed 4,000,000,000 rubles in a special fund for self-defense against the military aggression feared from the west and the east. We were much impressed upon meeting a White Russian professor, who a few years ago was bitter against the regime for its treatment of the intellectuals, now rushing down to the government office to be the first, if possible, to subscribe one month's salary to this loan. He is filled with genuine enthusiasm for the program of education, and for the unprecedented development of the whole Russian people.

Improvements Noted Along Economic Front.

AS I RETURNED to Russia this year I jotted down my first impressions. Broadly, I noted an immense advance and improvement along the entire economic and social front, not only with each five-year plan, but from year to year. Excepting for a temporary backset in each of the five crises already noted, I found a slow but steady economic advance in industry and agriculture, but very brilliant and rapid progress in social matters, such as education, the reclamation of criminals, the steady abolition of prostitution, the multiplication of social services and insurance, socialized medicine, and provision for the esthetic and cultural life of the masses.

The first thing that struck many of us this year was the improvement in the looks of the people. They are better dressed, they hold their heads up, they feel that the whole country is their own in the first workers' state the world has ever seen. There is an increasing look of general contentment and well-being. Youth is happy and carefree and their marching ranks filled every city we visited in the Soviet Union. The drive of nascent enthusiasm is unabated and is even greater than it was 20 years ago.

Everywhere we saw the extending of new paved streets and roads, the rising of new buildings, and the use in Moscow of what is unquestionably the most beautiful marble subway in the world.

Suspect British

An Editorial In The Nation

Growing Distrust For England.

IN THE PAST FEW WEEKS there has suddenly arisen in certain circles a suspicion of British foreign policy which is almost hysterical in intensity. It is epitomized in the catchy title of Quincy Howe's new book, "England Expects Every American to Do His Duty," but its intensity requires a more fundamental explanation than is to be found in his pages.

A certain amount of anti-British feeling has existed in the United States from the Revolution down to modern times, as was evidenced, for example, by Mayor Thompson's antics in Chicago. The Nye investigation increased the suspicion, already existing, that England inveigled America into the World War to save its imperial interests. But even at the height of the Nye committee's activities, feeling against England did not approach its present strength.

• • • •

THE WEAKNESS of British foreign policy during the past few years has undoubtedly contributed to anti-British sentiment. While it may seem inconsistent that Americans, whose own country has been the chief offender in undermining the mechanism for collective security, should berate England for its failure to support collective action against Japan in 1931 and its vacillation on oil sanctions in 1935, this is precisely what has occurred.

Americans are firm believers in the collective system as long as the United States is not involved. Similarly, Britain's failure to support democracy in Spain has created a very bad impression in this country, although the application to Spain of our neutrality law has aided the rebels precisely as has England's nonintervention policy.

Distrust of British policy was increased, moreover, by the stupidity and callousness with which the Cabinet handled the abdication and marriage of Edward. And the American public has taken even less kindly to the aloof Chamberlain than to the moral Baldwin. There is a widespread feeling, which the new Prime Minister has done little to alleviate, that the present British government may ultimately land on the side of Hitler.

• • • •

TO WHAT DEGREE these specific items in British policy account for the present antagonism toward England is hard to say. Quincy Howe gives very little space in his book to a detailed analysis of England's shortcomings and a great deal to the vague assertion that the British empire is consciously looking to the United States to pull its chestnuts out of the fire.

This interpretation of British policy is being freely applied to the Far Eastern crisis. Opponents of collective action are saying either that it is useless for the United States to consider taking action in the Orient, since Britain will not cooperate, or that this country should be wary of positive measures because Britain is only trying to use us to prop up its own interests in the East.

Nothing could be more unfortunate than that this distrust should serve to prevent cooperation between the two countries when the closest unity of action is essential. It is probably true that Great Britain would like to see the United States assume the leadership in any measures that are taken to curb Japanese aggression. But it is equally obvious that the United States would be only too gratified to see England bear the onus of action against Japan. Essentially, the interests of the two countries—economic, political, and social—are identical as far as China is concerned.

The fact that a measure which served to check Japanese aggression would also be of assistance to Britain is by no means a convincing reason for refusing to cooperate in support of the Nine-Power Pact—which is very largely an American document.

Help The Poor Trailer Addict!

With thousands of trailer or Bounding Bungalow owners afraid to move in low gear through any community without their lawyer, the matter of uniform trailer legislation is at last being taken up.

• • • •

Conferences are being held in New York and elsewhere, with the distracted trailer occupant leaning out the window hoping for a clear signal whether to take a right or left turn through the conflicting ordinances.

• • • •

There are more laws, rules, regulations and special orders governing Leaping Domiciles than there are governing all other vehicles in history. If something isn't done soon the trailer manufacturers will have to install a special compartment for storing conflicting ordinances.

• • • •

One State says that a trailer 60 feet long is okay and another limits them to 27 feet; one community bars the Careening Households if they weigh more than 1,000 pounds and another doesn't care what they weigh as long as they don't throw garbage out the window.

• • • •

New York State bars them from parkways, Connecticut says they mustn't be over 12½ feet high, and there are said to be cities which prohibit cooking while going around curves.

• • • •

A man starting out in a trailer, which is perfectly legal in Vermont, may find himself caught in a jam of complicated ordinances in New Hampshire, ditched by a State rule in Massachusetts, pinched in Connecticut under the fire laws and thrown into the hoosegow in New York for not having a bumper on his quick-detachable bed.

• • • •

Elmer Twitchell, the old trailer enthusiast, says the camel that went through the eye of the needle had an easy passage compared with the job a man takes when he bundles his family into one of these Flying Igloos and starts on an inter-state trip.

• • • •

"It's terrible," declares Elmer. "I struck a town before I had been going 50 miles where an ordinance required that the refrigerator show a red light front and rear. Not far from that town I ran into a place where there was a law prohibiting the frying of fish in any moving kitchenette within the city limits!

• • • •

"The next morning I was held up by a cop who said I was violating a regulation requiring that all beds be made before 9:30.

• • • •

"In one State the trailer commission met me at the gates of a large city, gave me the keys to the city and apologized for not having hot water in the swimming pool in the community trailer camp. Twenty miles away in the next city they fined me $50 for parking anywhere in town, denounced me as a menace to public health and said that if my wife had any sense she would sue me for yanking her around the country that way."

• • • •

Elmer says he met the Most Pathetic Trailer Case in Georgia recently. The man was a distinguished lawyer and former jurist. He decided on a trailer vacation but had a nervous breakdown on the first 500 miles trying to wade through the legislation on trailers.

Court Etiquette.

Now that women are allowed to serve on juries in New York, the big question is what kind of hat to wear during an arson trial and what color to tint the nails during a Mate-Slays-Mate case.

"Then in the midst of the Nazi ceremonies a voice proclaimed Germany the Isle of Peace upon whose frontiers all source of war had died in a world of hate."—News item.

It's all done by mirrors.

A bar and tavern exposition in New York wants to locate the oldest bartender in the country and have him present as its guest. Students of the bartender situation in America today tell us the oldest bartender now employed can't be a day over 27.

Tom McCarthy

Tells the Story of "Frenchy," a Friend of His Who Built a House.

TOM McCARTHY, The Washington Post's roving reporter, who has just returned from a summer of roving between the District of Columbia and the State of California, begins a new series of articles today. He will continue to rove, this time somewhat nearer home, writing of the things he sees and the people he meets from day to day in this newspaper. Today he tells a poignant little story of "Frenchy," a construction gang member with whom McCarthy once worked in northern New York. Tomorrow and Wednesday he writes of a quick trip into the apple growing country of the Shenandoah Valley. Where his roving will take him after that, frankly, we don't know.

HE MADE ROOM for himself on the scaffolding by pushing aside a box of tools. Then he sat on the plank, dangling his feet, and puffing at his pipe. Dusk was closing in on the street in the Tacoma Park district and quiet followed. I wondered if the man with the pipe had been working on his own house. I remembered a little man in northern New York who had built himself a house. The difference was that "Frenchy" couldn't sit through the early dusk of an Adirondack evening, smoking.

TOM McCARTHY.

The doctor had told him that he couldn't use tobacco. Most things had been forbidden to "Frenchy" . . . except hard work. That didn't matter much to him though, because he was building a house.

I worked on the same construction gang with him some summers ago and if there was one colorless, indefinite personality among those thick-wristed French Canadians in Dannemora, N. Y., it was "Frenchy." He was colorless until you knew his story.

He was a little man with straw colored hair and a constant, deferential smile. He wasn't an American citizen and his fellow French Canadians dubbed him "Frenchy" because, unlike themselves, he scarcely spoke English. They used to kid him a lot but, strangely, there was always an element of respect in their manner and a certain boundary which they did not transgress.

Seles Varin, who was a driller and one of the strongest men I have ever seen, used to shout insults at "Frenchy," even while he laughed uproariously. I don't think "Frenchy" always understood them, but he would smile brightly, and answer in the few English words he knew. Many of them were not only English, they were definitely Anglo-Saxon, and Seles, who would have taken such language from no other man, would merely laugh.

• • • •

I'D NEVER NOTICED anything definitely peculiar about "Frenchy" until one day the gang boss sent me to help him grade a stretch of "backfill." I had noticed that "Frenchy" never joined the others in a beer after work and that he neither smoked nor chewed. The latter omission was the most grievous. Other than that, I had never noticed anything particularly peculiar.

Riding up the grade, the truck driver forewarned me of surprises. "You're going to get a laugh out of 'Frenchy,' " he said.

"Frenchy" didn't look up as the truck rode noisily over the rough, ungraded ground. Head down, he continued the backward and forward movement of his shovel, with same mechanical intensity which would outpace half the men on the job. At first I didn't notice anything to laugh about, and then I noticed his legs. His trousers had been rolled high above his knees!

Nowadays, collegians and businessmen play tennis in shorts, but a few years ago, in the mountain locked prison town of Dannemora, a day laborer in shorts would have caused anything from a riot to a jail break. "Frenchy" having in his hand a shovel, instead of a tennis racket, and wearing his trousers high above his knees, was definitely funny. At least the truck driver thought so.

• • • •

"ME NO LIKE EITHER," "Frenchy" said, with an apologetic gesture toward his legs, "but the doctor, he say there is something wrong. I have pains there, so he say to do this. He say the sun—she good for my legs." "Frenchy" smiled as he always did.

I don't know exactly what was wrong with "Frenchy's" legs, nor do I know what was wrong with his heart, that he could not smoke. I know that he looked longingly at a proffered cigarette, before refusing it, and that, when the "Big Boss" came around, he rolled his pants down hurriedly for fear he would be laughed at.

The thing I did learn in those long afternoons of pick and shovel with "Frenchy" was that he didn't care what was wrong with his heart, nor what was wrong with his legs, that they pained him so. He didn't care about the laughter at his English, nor about the laughter at his rolled pants. Withal his deferential smile and straw-colored hair, there was a quiet pride. He was proud for he was building a house.

He had always wanted a house and he had no quarrel with anyone because it was hard to attain. He had no quarrel with the doctor who told him that something was wrong with his heart and that he must not smoke nor work too hard. He felt no anger that hot, sharp pains played through the backs of his legs. His only struggle was with himself, to build a house.

I knew how much "Frenchy" was making that summer. We both earned the same pay, $16 a week. I knew that in years past he had probably earned even less. That is not much with which to rear a family . . . and build a house.

I knew "Frenchy's" family, and they lived in comfort. The children were clean, happy, and well fed. They were noisy, fat youngsters about five or six years old. And I knew that the building of the house did not come out of them. It came out of "Frenchy."

• • • •

"COME IN and have a beer 'Frenchy'," they would yell at the end of the workday, knowing that he would smile and say no . . . and then add, "Me build house."

Eight, 10 and 12 hours a day he worked in the fields and on the construction gangs in and around that north country. Always, there was that quick weakness of heart in his chest and those driving pains racing through the backs of his legs. But he would merely smile, work and lay aside for his family and his house.

Always, behind that smiling mask, topped by straw-colored hair, there was that dream. From $16 a week, from $12 a week, he put aside money, ten cents and a dollar at a time. Then he bought a lot. Land is cheap in the north country, but it was a good lot, far out on the main road, where some day the town may grow. Then year after year, he piled lumber on his land.

The pile grew. The boards sometimes warped into uselessness, but he added to his store, begging and buying the waste lumber at fires and from demolished buildings.

Early that summer he began to build. His brother-in-law helped him to lay the foundation, and then he carried on from there alone. I was tired after eight hours of shoveling concrete, grading, backfilling and carrying iron cups of hot lead to caulk the pipes. I think "Frenchy" must have been very tired, too, on some of those days, when a quick look of surprise, subtle as a shadow, would flicker on his face, as his heart did something "queer."

• • • •

THE OTHER WORKERS and myself would celebrate the end of the day with a leisurely glass of beer. We would relax in the coolness of the bar, feeling the tiredness pouring out of our muscles. "Frenchy" was never with us then. He would go to his land. He would struggle with his lumber, hammer, plane and saw. Sometimes his wife would walk out from town at the dinner hour and bring him cold sandwiches. Then she would sit silently, watching him until light faded behind the mountains west of town and darkness claimed his work. Together, they would go back to the village and the children, in their rented room.

As the floor spanned the foundation and the building began to take shape, I would see the sober-faced French woman and her never silent children more often. They would spend the afternoon there and cook "Frenchy" his evening meal . . . on a wood stove, which eventually would be moved inside. The woman always sat very still and the children were always playing wildly as I would ride by with a truck bound for Plattsburg. I was never able to wave to "Frenchy" going home nights, because his head was always bent intently toward a board to be sawed or a measurement to be taken.

When dark cut short his work in the evening, he would go home. He would be back at his "house" at dawn and work until it was time to be on our construction job, at seven. For eight hours he would pace the best men on the job, and then he would be back hammering at the framework of the home he was building. He never spoke of the work, or the pain in his legs. It was simply, "Me build house."

• • • •

ONE DAY on the job he came up to me, and said with a smile that was bright and not at all deferential, "We move in."

I was living in town at that time, and hadn't driven by "Frenchy's" place in weeks. That evening, I drove out to see it. It was no small house. It was a house to match the best of them. It had two stories and an attic.

In the fading light, I could recognize the lumber from a dozen sources. In the south wall were the scorched gray boards from the store which had burned down the previous March. Along the base, near the foundation, were the boards which had once been part of a cattle barn. But that didn't seem important.

Through the first-floor windows I could see the orange glow from the wood stove, and, by the wavering march of shadows through the room, I knew the family was at home.

I knew that "Frenchy" had a house!

Better Standards Urged by Hopkins

Wahpeton, N. Dak., Sept. 12 (AP).—Harry Hopkins, administrator of the Works Progress Administration, said in an address today that one of the first and most important jobs a democratic government has is the responsibility for "making every person and every group keep his hands off everyone else."

"We have spelled this idea out in many, many different ways since our Constitution adopted the Bill of Rights," he said. "And so, when I see certain selfish groups overreaching again, and threatening to destroy our hard-won recovery, I say that it's part of this Government's job to step in.

"Any other idea that a government must stand idle and helpless while its citizens are destroyed runs contrary to my philosophy of government and to my belief that the lasting fury of another depression can only be averted if farmers and workers can raise their standards of living."

Illicit Rum Spurs Hunt for Source

Police last night were attempting to locate the source of a large supply of illicit liquor confiscated during the past few days by Second Precinct police.

Their action came after an automobile equipped with smoke screen and containing 35 gallons of bootleg liquor was uncovered in an unoccupied garage in the 100 block of Adams street northwest.

Policemen R. W. Creel and G. V. Moore, of the Second Precinct, discovered the car early yesterday. Saturday night Lieut. M. O. Holmes and Sergt. John Hite, Second Precinct, captured a colored man and seized 10 gallons of the untaxed liquor.

D. C. Bar Unit to Map Plans for Convention

Members of the District Bar Association will meet in the Mayflower Hotel Wednesday at 4:30 p. m. to discuss the national meeting of the association September 27 in Kansas City, Mo.

Members of the District chapter have maintained the position of third largest visiting delegation at the last three conventions and W. L. Gray, secretary of the association, has announced that more than 100 Washington lawyers are expected to attend this meeting.

New York Primary Enters Last Stretch

New York, Sept. 12 (AP).—New York's most jumbled municipal primary in recent years headed into the home stretch tonight with confusion still the keynote.

Battles over what the issues were rather than over issues themselves held the spotlight as the mayoralty rivals—Fiorello LaGuardia, Jeremiah T. Mahoney and Senator Royal S. Copeland—headed their campaigns toward Thursday's voting climax on three pointedly divergent tacks.

Copeland, Tammany Hall anti-New Deal Democrat, will oppose LaGuardia, pro-New Deal Fusion incumbent, in the Republican primary, and Mahoney, New Deal Democrat, in the Democratic.

The leading dispute was over whether the New Deal, on which the election is expected to be a barometer of national significance, was an issue in the campaign.

Mexico Increases Ad Valorem Levy

Exporters shipping to Mexico were notified yesterday by Luis Quintanilla, counselor of the Mexican Embassy, that beginning Wednesday 3 per cent of the invoice value of the goods will be collected as a tax. This is in addition to the present 5 per cent ad valorem collected as an advance of the import duties, the announcement stated.

Collection will be made by Mexican consuls, in accordance with a special decree of August 31. "The 3 per cent to be collected, however, is not a fee or a new tax, but represents an advance payment of the tax that agents and representatives of foreign firms selling in Mexico must pay according to the income-tax law of 1925," Quintanilla said.

Student Fallacies Stressed by Cleric

The divine will may be fulfilled on the football field and the golf links as well as in the classroom and in the chapel, Dr. Maurice S. Sheehy, head of the department of religion at Catholic University of America, declared yesterday in a radio address over Station WEAF as part of the Catholic hour.

"Spiritual Fallacies in Student Life" was his subject. He listed five fallacies which incline "youth to deceive itself"—"that of isolating actions from their real place in the unity of life, that of isolating sections from the social significance, that of self-exception, that of spiritual valuation, and that of ignoring the law of unity of life."

Dr. Sheehy's talks will be continued.

Army Team Accepts Bid to Participate at Meadowbrook.

Chile Also May Send Its Best for Classic October 20.

On the final day of the Inter-American Horse Show at Meadowbrook last October, Maj. Frank L. Whittaker, manager, asked through the loud speaker, "How many people here would like to see a European team competing in next year's show?" As one, the 5,000 spectators stood in their seats and applauded.

And a European team will compete in this year's big show—the Belgian army team, which ranks as one of the best in Europe. As yet embassy officials have not announced the names of the four officers who will arrive here October 14, but that they are coming is certain. The Belgian Ambassador, co-operating with members of the executive committee and State Department officials, has assured Maj. Whittaker that his country's team will be present and the officers will bring eight of their great mounts to show in the international horse show ring.

For several months show officials thought the Irish team would show here, but previous commitments made that plan impossible. The Chilean team, which has shown here in both preceding shows, is not coming to this country this year. However, there is a possibility that the Mexican team, which competed with the United States Army team and the Chilean team last fall, will be here for the big meet.

Has Great Record.

The Belgian team has a great record of achievement. It won the coveted Irish Challenge Cup at Olympia in London last spring and placed second for the King George Challenge Cup, with seven of the best teams in Europe competing. In fact, in these two events it placed ahead of the United States Army team. But at Aachen, Germany, the United States Army team reversed the proceeding and came out ahead of the Belgian team. So keen competition may well be expected in the forthcoming show.

There will, of course, be a round of entertaining for the visiting team, winding up with the traditional ball on the Saturday night before the final day of the show. Washington loves nothing so much as feting visitors, especially when those visitors are sportsmen.

Meadowbrook is already the scene of great activity. New jumps are being built, the set-up for the international team jumping events in preparation. Boxes face the arena on the west side, reserved seats on the north, bleachers—and plenty of them—on the east. Modern stables will quarter the mounts. In fact, when the bugle blows Thursday, October 21, announcing the official opening of the meet, everything will have been worked out to the last detail by Maj. Whittaker.

The United States Army team, headed by Capt. Hilo H. Matteson, has just returned from its European tour, where it gathered new laurels. The famous old Dakota, whose antics always amuse spectators, whose casual jumping leaves them breathless, added new fame for himself and his team when, at the Aachen show, with 48 horses from 12 nations competing in the Prix des Nations, he placed best in the jump-off. And this means that this great horse is one of the best four or five horses in the world.

Miss Harrell Wed To Mr. McKenzie

Ceremony Is Performed at Church in Del Ray.

The wedding of Miss Helen Edith Harrell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Russell A. Harrell, of Arlington, to William E. McKenzie, of Cander, N. C., took place Saturday evening in the parsonage of the Methodist Church in Del Ray, Va., the Rev. E. V. Regester, officiating. The immediate families attended.

The bride wore a brown georgette dress with matching accessories and a large picture hat of brown trimmed in a contrasting shade. Her shoulder corsage was of Talisman rosebuds.

Mrs. Donald Rohwer was her sister's matron of honor and only attendant. She was gowned in blue crepe with matching accessories and wore a corsage of gardenias. Donald Rohwer, brother-in-law of the bride, was best man.

Following an informal reception at the parsonage, Mr. and Mrs. McKenzie left by motor for a wedding trip to White Sulphur Springs. On their return they will live with the bride's parents.

Each Day of Week's Calendar Is Filled

A.A. U. W. Leads Revival of Activity With Meeting Today.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

This week, for the first time since the summer slump in organization activities, every day has a full quota of events on its calendar. Today the executive board of the Washington Branch of the American Association of University Women is having its first meeting, called by Mrs. Richard Hogue, the president, for 12:30 in the small dining room of the clubhouse. The informal Monday afternoon tea in the lounge for the club membership will be at 4:30.

The visiting nurse unit of the Petworth Woman's Club also will have its first session today, beginning its work a month earlier than usual this season. Jacob Jones Post of the American Legion is electing new officers tonight; two chapters of the Eastern Star, Miriam and Columbia, are having their opening sessions and the Non-Academic Pan-Hellenic Association is holding its first fall meeting this evening.

Tomorrow night Lebanon and Electa Chapters, O. E. S., will meet, and the Business Women's Council will have its regular program at Covenant-First Presbyterian Church. There will also be the meeting of Abigail Hartman Rice Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, at the home of Miss Virginia Jordan, at 8 p. m.

Wednesday the Soroptimist Club will celebrate the sesquicentennial of the Constitution at its first fall luncheon in the cabinet room of the Willard Hotel. Members of the Venture Club will be guests.

Chi Sigma Sorority
To Have Conference

Thursday Alpha Province of Chi Sigma Sorority will open its annual conference at the Mayflower Hotel. Miss Jo Sullivan, who was elected national treasurer at the sorority's national convention at Toronto in July, and who is the outgoing province president, will preside.

After the business meeting Thursday evening, a memorial service will be conducted by Mrs. Lorraine Good, one of the founders of Chi Sigma, and president of the Washington Alumni Chapter.

A banquet followed by a dance is scheduled for Saturday evening in the Chinese room of the Mayflower and is in charge of Miss Lenora Lester, chairman of the entertainment committee. A cocktail party Sunday, at the home of Mrs. Good, on Morningside drive, will conclude the conference. Mrs. Lillie Marie Jones, of Baltimore, national president of the sorority, will be guest of honor for the entire conference.

The Osteopathic Women's National Association Auxiliary has announced its first fall luncheon meeting for Thursday afternoon at 1:30 at Collier Inn. Dr. Lucy Maxfield, president, will preside.

Events to Mark
Constitution Day

Friday will be a day of celebrations marking the sesquicentennial of the Constitution. The Daughters of the American Revolution have completed plans for their program at Memorial Continental Hall in which other patriotic societies and veterans' organizations of the city have been invited to participate.

Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig, State regent for the District, will preside and Miss Earlene White, president of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, will be the speaker for the occasion. The meeting will open at 8:15 instead of 8:30, in order to be over by 9:30, when the President's address will be received over the radio. The program will be preceded, from 7:45 to 8:15, by a concert by the United States Navy Band Orchestra.

Following the massing of the colors there will be an invocation by the Rev. Edward Hughes Pruden, pastor of First Baptist Church; the recitation of "Hats Off" by Raymona Weigand, member of the Betsy Ross Club of Junior American Citizens, sponsored by the District of Columbia D. A. R.; the Pledge of Allegiance, led by Mrs. William D. Leetch, chairman of correct use of the flag; American's Creed, by Jack Painter, secretary of the Robert Morris Club of Junior American Citizens; the singing of "America;" greetings by Mrs. Haig and Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen; a group of songs by Frances Mehaffey, accompanied by Kathryn Latimer; piano solos by Miriam Dingley Leetch, and songs by Jean Bishop, accompanied by Jewell Downs. There will also be greetings from the president of the D. C. Sons of the American Revolution, Dr. Clifton P. Clark; the president of the Sons of the Revolution, Dr. Thomas E. Green; the honorary president of the Children of the American Revolution, Mrs. C. A. Swann Sinclair, and from the secretary general of the National Society, Sons of the Revolution, Frank B. Steele. Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld, of the Eighth Street Temple, will pronounce the benediction.

Serving with Mrs. Haig on the committee on arrangements are Miss Lillian Chenoweth, vice regent; Mrs. Earl Brentwood Miller and Mrs. Ford E. Young, jr., chairman of ushers.

Interior Department
To Sponsor Dance

Another event in celebration of Constitution Day will be the dance of the Recreation Association of the Department of the Interior, which several hundred members and guests are expected to attend. There will be a floor show by members of the association, including songs and dances, and the President's message, received by radio, will also be a feature of the program at the party.

The ceremony took place Friday at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, and on the following day Mr. Douglas and his bride sailed for a three-month wedding trip to the Scandinavian countries, central Europe and Italy.

ABOUT THE TOWN

With Dudley Harmon

Mr. and Mrs. John Farr Simmons announce the arrival of an 8-pound son on Saturday evening at Columbia Hospital. The boy will be named John Farr Simmons, jr.

The baby's mother is the former Caroline Huston Thompson, and is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Huston Thompson, who are both well known in civic and social circles here.

Jack and Caroline, who make their home on Thirty-third street in Georgetown, in a charming Victorian house, were married last November at the Sulgrave Club. Jack is chief of the visa division of the State Department, but his four years of duty here will be up in midwinter, so their many friends will have to bid them good-by in a few months.

Most diplomats grab at vacations between posts as a good excuse to stay for a while in one spot and rest up before moving around again. But not Burke Elbrick, formerly Third Secretary of our legation and American Vice Consul at Port-au-Prince, Haiti, who has recently been assigned to Warsaw, Poland, as Third Secretary of Embassy.

He and Mrs. Elbrick only returned from a visit in New York last week, but are off again today for a flying trip to Mexico. While in Washington they have been staying with Mrs. Elbrick's parents, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Alfred Johnson, at their residence on R street.

The Elbricks expect to sail about the middle of October for their new post. Washingtonians who have found their way to Port-au-Prince in the past few years will certainly miss them, as Mr. and Mrs. Elbrick showed much hospitality to residents of the Capital. Their place as welcomers will be filled to some extent by Merritt Cootes, son of Col. and Mrs. Harry N. Cootes, of Alexandria, who was assigned to Port-au-Prince earlier in the summer.

• • • •

Another foreign service change of interest to Washington is that of Charles W. Thayer, of Villanova, Pa., who has been switched from his post as Vice Consul at Moscow to Vice Consul in Berlin. Mr. Thayer is the brother of Mrs. Charles Eustis Bohlen. Mr. Bohlen has been named to our embassy to the Soviet, but does not expect to leave Washington until January.

Done in the Morgan manner was the dance which Mr. and Mrs. Junius Spencer Morgan and their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Skinner Clark, gave on Saturday at their Glen Cove, Long Island, place for two debutantes, Miss Marie T. McCook, of Pasadena, Calif., and Miss Anstiss Dana, of Boston. The affair took place both indoors and on the lawn, where a large marquee was arranged for dancing. Brilliant illuminations reaching from the gardens to the gates cast a glow over the island estate and indoors the rooms were decorated with bowls of flowers from the greenhouses of Mr. Morgan on East Island—roses, chrysanthemums, gladioli and potted plants.

Assisting as host was John Pierpont Morgan 3d, son of Mr. and Mrs. Morgan and grandson of J. P. Morgan, who returned last week from Europe. He will resume his studies at Harvard next week.

Miss McCook will be presented to Washington society around Thanksgiving time by her grandmother, Mrs. Anson McCook, and her aunt, Mrs. McCook Knox.

Marc Peter, Minister of Switzerland, and Jonkheer van Haersma de With, Netherlands envoy to Washington, will dock in New York today on the French liner Normandie. Both are returning from vacations in Europe and both will be joined later in the season by their wives.

A Man's Idea of It.

(An interview.)

"What do you think of a woman for President in 1940, Mr. Skeedle?"

"I'm against it. But don't misunderstand me. It's not that I've got anything against women—as women. No man ever thought more of his dear old mother than I do. She raised 11 children. In fact, I often say that all I am in the world today I owe to my mother. But—now if I can just make my point clear——"

"You mean you wouldn't vote for her for President?"

"That's it exactly! Now this is the way I look at it. I never would want to see a mother of mine in the White House. You get my oint? Now, then, you take my wife. She's the finest little woman in the world, but—Ha, ha, ha, ha, ha! . . ."

"I don't quite follow you, Mr. Skeedle?"

"I was just laughing at the idea of my wife being President. You get my point?"

"But, after all, Mr. Skeedle, maybe they wouldn't nominate your wife?"

"All right, who would they nominate? You see it's this way—if I can make it clear to you—where would they ever find a normal woman that'd run for President? They'd have to take some old maid who went into politics because she couldn't get a man. You understand?"

"I believe so. You think woman's place is the home?"

"Oh, no, no, no! I'm not that old-fashioned. Now you listen carefully and see if you can follow me. The whole point is—women are too engrossed in sentiment. Now you take the girl in my office—Ha, ha, ha, ha! . . ."

"I don't follow you, Mr. Skeedle."

"I was just laughing at the idea of the girl in my office being President. Now I don't say she's not efficient. I don't know what I'd do without her. But let me see if I can explain it. Now, suppose she was running for President and a good looking man came along? You get my point?"

"Yes, but Mr. Skeedle, maybe they wouldn't nominate the girl in your office?"

"All right then. Let's say they nominate a middle-aged woman—say around 35. Now how could she be President without leaving her children around with Tom, Dick and Harry? You understand?"

"But suppose she didn't have any children?"

"Well, then, she'd have to neglect her husband. I tell you this country would never stand for a woman who neglected her husband. Do I make my point clear to you?"

"Yes, I know—but, Mr. Skeedle, just suppose the right kind of woman could be nominated, say some widow without children——"

"They could never elect her, and I'll explain to you why. Unless she was a pretty woman, the men wouldn't vote for her. And if she was, the women wouldn't vote for her. Another thing—now here's the whole thing in a nutshell—where could they find a woman of any kind qualified to be President? What woman has any inventive genius? You understand?"

"Not exactly. Does a President have to be an inventor?"

"Well, he has to have creative genius. He has to have imagination, initiative, vision. He has to have depth of learning, brilliance of mind, understanding of people, character, courage, an indominable will, dashing leadership, insuperable poise, flaming faith, an overpowering personality——"

"Just a minute, Mr. Skeedle. May I ask just what man you have in mind for your candidate?

"Well, I havn't found the exact man—yet. But, I'm looking around. You get my point?"

Heavily Veiled This Fall, She Becomes a Woman of Mystery

What you can do with a veil—either black or scarlet—to make yourself a romantic figure this season is illustrated in these two photographs. Below is a daring and dramatic arrangement—a scarlet rayon veil with wide border which extends over the shoulders and ripples in front down to the waistline. The hat, designed by Louiseanders, is made of numerous circles of felt, achieving height through the side loop of self-material. At right, a circular black veil of fine mesh covers the crush-resistant velvet beret with its multi-colored ostrich quills and falls gracefully in a flaring line to the shoulders.

Veils for All Hours Decreed By Fashion Experts for Fall

By Ethel Ehlen.

The Post Fashion Editor.

VEILS FOR ALL HOURS of the day and night is fashion's new dictum. There is no longer any set rule about the time or place for wearing a veil, or the type of hat with which it should be worn. Veils, this fall, according to Paris and New York designers, may adorn any type of head-covering, from sports to formal evening. The new veils, and they are definitely new, add formality to the casual costume, and extra chic to the formal ensemble. All veils, as every woman knows, give an air of romance and femininity to even the most prosaic costume.

Veils in the new manner complicate the wardrobe, for you not only have to think up some intriguing and individual way to wear a veil to be distinctive, but there are all sorts of sizes, shapes and types of mesh. These may be fine or heavy; square, round or oblong; several varieties used together; plain or embroidered; those with or without borders. Then there are the meshes which are widely or closely spaced, and meshes made of silk, cotton or synthetics.

Glamorous Arrangements.

Black leads in the veil color chart, with brown next, and then wine and dark green; gray is a new veil color, which has just bounded into popularity. In keeping with the desire this season for a bit of bright color to accent the dark costume, there are numerous smart veils of black with colored dots of velvet or chenille. For evening, formal afternoon and cocktails, there are glamorous veils of black mesh with sequins, gold embroidery, or cellophane flower or bird motifs. Dotted veils, by the way, have taken on new pattern arrangements and flatter the wearer much more than in other seasons.

There are many glamourous new ways of wearing a veil. It all depends upon the clothes you are wearing and the amount of dash and sparkle you desire to add to your costume. For instance, you may choose a veil anywhere from 10 to 30 inches or more in diameter, and allow it just to cover your chin or extend down to your knees. You may prefer a side-swirl veil which starts at one side of the hat and falls to the shoulder, or, for a wide-brimmed hat, one that covers the crown and extends down to the waistline or knees. Then, there is the widow's peak veil which falls down from each side of the hat leaving the front of the head exposed; very sophisticated.

The "Window Curtain" Veil.

For both casual hats and turbans, many of the veils start at the back of the crown or brim and fall down the back to any length desired. A very striking veil, noted on a formalized calot, extended across the front of the hat only and fell gracefully below the neckline. Large square or circular veils, covering the entire hat and swooping out over the shoulders, are worn this fall with both suits and formal afternoon frocks. One of the most daring of veil arrangements, which originated in Paris and is called the "window curtain," is of medium length and is attached to the brim of the hat by a wire, making it adjustable; in this way, you may arrange the veil to suit your fancy, while you are wearing it.

Duchess' Figure Inspires Design For 'Corselette'

New York (AP).—The Duchess of Windsor's figure and clothes have inspired fall fashions in girdles.

Her wedding dress with its draped bustline and long, curved, slender diaphragm, has influenced the design of new "corselette" frocks for fall and necessitated girdles of the same line to create the right profile.

Moreover, designers say, the Duchess' slender silhouette has convinced women that they need not lose their figures when they pass 40 and has focused attention on clothes for petite short women.

The new girdles are designed with a slender curved diaphragm, a flat or concave midriff and a molded hipline. No bulges. For slender figures there are separate girdles and brassieres; for heavier women all-in-one models that mold the figure from bust to hips.

None of them is heavily boned. Instead, designers have worked with elasticized fabrics which mold and hold the figure.

Velvets Are on Top Of Winter Style Heap

Paris (AP).—Velvets are on the top of the winter fashion heap. Lyons velvet makes loose sports coats, while fine silk velvets are used for afternoon suits and all-day frocks. Velvet tuck-in blouses are a big note. They go with sports and tailored suits, and sometimes match velvet details on the jackets.

Chic stuffs for afternoon dresses take in new thick cloque weaves, and marocain crepes spotted over with gold thread motifs. Lustrous satins make one and two piece frocks; fine silk jerseys fashion draped types for afternoon. Added to plain velvets are some printed ones stressing Persian patterns. Wool tailored frocks come out in fine tweeds, Angora mixtures, and new jerseys.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Sept. 12.

THE VISITING celebrity season has arrived with the thump of the inflated pigskin, and almost daily I trudge off to a luncheon or banquet tossed in honor of the champion bridge-dealer of Albania or Lady Derriere de Vere, inventor of the non-pinch zipper.

ALICE HUGHES.

Before Lucien Lelong left on his tour to Hollywood, we were stuffing him within an inch of his life. I feared for his waistline, and so stated in an open letter to him in a New York newspaper. The same day I received a wire from him, written 10,000 feet above Indiana. "Please lunch with me when I return to New York," wrote Lelong. "We will have nothing to eat but a crust of bread and water with big lumps of ice. I don't get fat from the lunches, because all during the meal I worry about my speech."

So that may be the secret of the great army of visiting firemen who descend upon us with the advent of cool weather and the re-wakening of public interest. They do not bolt this terrifying succession of free feeds, but merely toy with the gutta percha chicken and deep-dish apple pie while they fret and stew about whether they are going to forget their pet stories. If this is true, it accounts for the fact that the noted women who come to this town every year seem to leave it just as shapely as they arrived.

Even a non-worrier may be safe from bloating—for the average hotel luncheon is not so tasty as to encourage over eating. So in a week or two Lelong will sit down to bread and water—and fashion shop talk!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—No matter how modern the man, he is very apt to be an old-fashioned parent. For a couple of years pretty little Jane Howard, daughter of Roy W., the newspaper publisher, has been head over teacup in love with a Latin-American youth, with Papa dead against the match. In order to douse it, he has kept Jane traveling all over the world, and right now she is doing advertising in Honolulu. But friends say thta Father's absent-treatment has failed to work. It's an old prescription that has never had much success with young hearts! . . .

Entering the Hotel Algonquin for a spot of tiffin the other noon, I saw our two loveliest Chinese girls, Anna May Wong of the films and Mei-Mei Tze, daughter of the Ambassador, with their heads together over a luncheon table. I learned they are planning a campaign here to raise funds for their embattled compatriots—and two such lovely girls should have no difficulty in shaking down our citizens . . .

• • • •

Seeing the houseboat Normandie off not long ago, I had a chance for a few words with Mrs. Hervey Allen, wife of the man who dashed off two-ton "Anthony Adverse" and made a young fortune from it. "I read it three times," Mme. Allen told me. "It's an exciting book." That's true—and to go through those 900,000 words thrice would seem to indicate stupendous love and devotion. . . .

• • • •

On the same hooker were the Douglas Fairbankses, Sr., with the former Lady Ashley in her usual hatless condition. The blonde Englishwoman is one of those pet peeves of the milliners. I asked her why. "This way, only my hair looks messy, instead of a hat, too." But this was libelous, as her locks are very pretty, and were neatness itself while she stood watching her spouse get a going-over from the news-hawks . . .

• • • •

This is the time of year when managers here "announce" the season's plays. To date, 184 have been heralded. But if half of them really turn up on Broadway, it will be a minor miracle. Announcing is a cinch—getting the show actually on is tough business!

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Three Years Ago Girl Said 'No' to Man's Suit; Now She Loves Him; How to Win Him?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Your advice on a previous occasion proved perfect. Therefore, I am turning to you again for aid. Briefly, the situation is this: I've discovered I was a fool not to have married the man I loved three years ago. We were both young. I was spoiled, petty and probably subconsciously afraid to assume the responsibility of marriage. So, with my blessing, he went away to his distant home State to make his fortune.

• • • •

I then began writing exaggerated accounts of my comings and goings, and also became jealous and unreasonable in my letters. I can't explain why I acted in such an idiotic way and I must have hurt him terribly. He was then, as he is now, the dearest, kindest boy I've ever known. Although our correspondence cooled in about a year, it has continued quietly with no mention of love. He has telephoned me every so often.

• • • •

Last week he called to tell me of a tragic accident in which his mother was killed and his father seriously injured. The next night he called again. This has upset me terribly and brought me to my senses. I realize now I haven't been happy since he left and that I will never love anyone else. My jealousy, pettiness, etc., have disappeared permanently. I'm a much better person than the one he loved so dearly three years ago. Perhaps I should say that he is 26; I am 23.

• • • •

How can I get him back? I believe he needs me. I hope his calling me at that sad hour meant something. I telegraphed flowers and I'm writing him, as he requested, almost daily. I write only as a very old and close friend trying to comfort him. Do I dare hope to win him back?

MISS RIP VAN WINKLE.

The Thing to Do.

DEAR MISS R. V. W.: It seems to me there are occasions in life and human relationships when one should dare to rise above trite conventionalities of conduct and act on the freer impulse of one's most generous emotions.

• • • •

It is to be regretted that he does not have, at this time, the immense consolation which complete reassurance of your wholehearted love might give him; and yet I do not believe this is the time to declare yourself, except indirectly. After all, it would be rather unseemly to speak of sweetheart love in this time of bereavement and particularly to emphasize the first personal singular in any written or conversational exchange. But I think you can, out of your newly-discovered depth of feeling, write him so sympathetically, so sweetly, so warmly, with such closely protective concern, that he will understand that his impulse to turn to you for strength and consolation was profoundly right.

• • • •

A little later, perhaps in a month or so, if the new note in your letters has not inspired him to speak once more of love, and of all that he once thought and perhaps still hopes, that you might mean to each other, then you might make an change of heart, telling how his prehonest and full confession of your sumptive need of you brought about an overnight maturity of understanding of yourself in relation to him. Tell him what you have told me of your erstwhile subconscious fear of the responsibilities of marriage; of your petty jealousy, coquettish exaggerations, and generally adolescent attitudes, all of which were wiped out on hearing of his bereavement. Tell him that, as atonement for your past sins, you are daring to speak frankly today; ask him if it is too late to turn back the hands of time to where you left off two years ago; and say that, if it is, you still wish to say that you are, and henceforth will be, a better person for having known him and for having shared, though vicariously, his grief.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Your Figure, Madame!

Dieting Is More Than Calorie-Counting; Avoid Dangers!

IT'S TIME you knew some of the facts about dieting. Ordinarily, all you ask of a diet is that it will make you thin. Any diet that is sufficiently low in calories will do that, but what should worry you is whether it will, at the same time, safeguard your health and looks.

When you cut down food intake, the body does not use fewer calories. Normally your total energy is supplied by your daily food intake. in reducing, the source of your energy is changed. The calories intake is cut so that it provides only a part of the energy you use; the other part is derived from last year's calories which were stored as fatty tissue.

Some Foods Not Stored.

When you draw on reserve for material other than that used for energy, you are endangering your health.

There is this to remember; stored calories are only stored fats and carbohydrates. The body does not store up an effective reserve of vitamins, minerals, and protein. For this reason it is highly important to base your diet in the protective foods. Otherwise, you rob your teeth for calcium, your body tissues for protein, and thus lower your general vitality.

We won't go deeply into the science of nutrition, but I want you to know the simple principles underlying scientific reducing. Wouldn't you like to be able to tell at a glance whether a diet is adequate? Fix these food classifications firmly in your mind. It isn't too difficult—in fact, food principles and calorie counting aren't nearly as complicated as honor points and the two-way three bid.

Surplus Makes Weight.

Food is fuel—our source of energy. This energy, or fuel value, is measured by the calorie, which is the heat unit. Some foods have more fuel, therefore more calories than others. You gain weight to the extent that the fuel foods in your menu exceeds your energy expenditure, conversely, a deficit in the fuel foods brings a loss in weight, since you draw on your stored fuel.

Now, the important thing to know is which food elements supply the most calories, and which foods contain the most of these fattening elements. The energy foods are classed as carbohydrates, protein, and fats.

Taught to the tune of the calorie stick.

First, carbohydrates: You should think of all sugars and starches as carbohydrates. This includes sugar and all sweets, breads and cereals. Carbohydrates supply energy to keep you going, but any excess is stored in the body or is converted into body fat.

Protein Necessary.

Protein is also a fuel food and contains as many calories per ounce as carbohydrates. Besides being an energy fuel, however, protein is used for repair and is essential in normal amounts in a reducing diet. The complete protein foods are milk, eggs, cheese, meat, fish and fowl.

Fats, which are the foods highest in fuel, are either burned or stored. The foods containing the higest percentage of fat are cream, butter, fat meats, fish and fowl, and oils.

To sum up of these three energy sources, protein in normal amounts is indispensible; carbohydrates can be decreased, and fats can be cut out almost entirely in a scientific reducing diet.

Chancellor Adolf Hitler announced a few days ago at Nuremberg during the Nazi Congress that it would "no longer be possible to disregard the community of will" between Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy. News pictures reveal that "community of will" to be a reality that has been developing over a period of years, symbolized by the picture below taken at Venice in 1934 when Hitler flew to Italy to greet Benito Mussolini. Despite the popular legend to the contrary, there are no baths, neither tub nor shower, in the office suites of Senators . . . For a bath they must go to the gymnasium—but they aren't obliged to take any exercise, of course.

Maybe this talk of a coolness between the President and Secretary Wallace is exaggerated . . . I hear it was Mr. Wallace who persuaded the President to sign the sugar bill despite faults both recognized, and that Wallace is talking him into calling a special session.

As everyone knows, the White House doesn't serve hard liquor to guests—only sherry and sauterne wines, and American brands at that—probably the same brand you and I buy (when we drink wine) and very moderately priced.

* * * *

But occasionally some admirer ships to the White House a case of some rare imported wine (along with turkeys and buckets of maple syrup), and the staff is inclined to treat these gifts rather unceremoniously and patriotically—it's often dumped into the harmless punch which is a White House standby for big parties.

"—Roosevelts are rough on courts"

To cool off I've been delving into history—nothing is so cooling as history . . . I discover that it was a court issue that licked Teddy Roosevelt in 1912—something he called "the judicial decisions." . . . That, and the steam roller at the Chicago convention. Even in 1912 court reform gave nice people the fidgets.

My taste in paintings is, of course, extremely uncouth; I confess that I like those modern PWA paintings now scattered so lavishly around the Government offices much more than I do the priceless fussy old paintings that adorn the walls of Washington's art galleries.

* * * *

I wouldn't want many of those masterpieces hanging in my house; too depressing. But I'd gladly give room to the cheerful PWA canvasses any time the Government runs out of wall space, which won't be very soon, at the rate the new buildings are going up.

"—clay pigeons land on their feet"

What a contrast there must be between the social life of the average girl in Annapolis, only 33 miles away, and the social life of an equally nice girl in Washington! Around the Naval Academy the likely young men must outnumber the girls two or three to one, while in Washington the girls are so numerous that they are reputed to get the jitters waiting for the phone to ring.

An amateur psychiatrist who has just returned from Europe makes this clinical report: "The anti-democratic countries must be crazy if they think that nothing they can do will make England fight; they must be even crazier if they think that a war involving England and France won't find us ultimately on the side of democracy, and they must be utterly insane if they don't realize that the democratic alliance would win."

* * * *

Incidentally, it must not be forgotten that the Congress which killed the League of Nations so far as America was concerned was the same Congress which gave us the Volstead act . . . All the New Deal's clay pigeons seem to land on their feet after describing a parabola from Washington; for example, Moley, George Peek, Hugh Johnson and Tugwell must be averaging at least $25,000 a year, which is planned economy at its best.

* * * *

Our indulgent Government allows its hirelings $5 a day for expenses while traveling—or $1.25 for six hours or a smaller fraction of a day . . . From this lavish allowance the traveling officials often buy meals for local politicos or officials they must coax into New Deal paths.

* * * *

Some of the travelers get a bit of revenge by starting on a trip at 11:50 p. m. and collecting $1.25 for the fractional 10 minutes . . . Occasionally the Accounting Office in Washington points out, however, that there was a 3 a. m. train that could have been taken later . . . The veterans checkmate this parsimony with a magical notation on the expense voucher:

Three Mark 50 Years in Priesthood

Fathers Kelly, Becker and McLoughlin Offer Thanksgiving.

Society of Jesus Members Are Honored at St. Aloysius Church.

With the Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, apostolic delegate to the United States, presiding and imparting the papal blessing, three members of the Society of Jesus yesterday celebrated their golden jubilee in a solemn high mass of thanksgiving at St. Aloysius Church.

They were the Rev. Laurence J. Kelly, pastor of the church and president of Gonzaga College, and two of his assistants, the Rev. Thomas A. Becker and the Rev. Joseph J. McLoughlin. Fathers Kelly and Becker entered the novitiate at Frederick, Md., on August 13, 1887. Father McLoughlin entered the next day. All three were ordained to the priesthood by the late Cardinal Gibbons on June 28, 1903.

Quinn Preaches Sermon.

The Rev. Daniel J. Quinn, of St. Ignatius Church, New York, who was a fellow novice with the jubilarians, preached the jubilee sermon. He said that during their 50 years of service, Father Kelly had typified the church executive, Father Becker the teacher, and Father McLoughlin the pastor.

In their lives he found parallels to the life of Christ, who, he pointed out, was an administrator, a teacher, and a missionary.

Father Quinn called attention to the fact that the three celebrants, who began their lives of service together, had spent the 50 years since then in many different States and foreign islands.

They were reunited at St. Aloysius only this summer, when Father Becker—the only native Washingtonian among them—was transferred here from Woodstock College. Father Kelly came to Washington in 1932, and Father McLoughlin in 1929.

If Heart Is Young.

Following the sermon, Father Kelly said, "If your heart keeps young, you do not feel aged at the end of 50 years. A sense of humor helps, too." He is 67, the "middle-aged" one of the trio, Father Becker being 65 and Father McLoughlin 68.

A reception by parishioners and friends closed the celebration last night at the Gonzaga auditorium.

Miss Mary Mattingly, representing the women of St. Aloysius Parish, extended congratulations and pledged continued loyalty to the principles which the jubilarians represent.

"The women of the parish realize," she said, "that your object in life was one and only one—to know God's will, and to do it. We rejoice with you on this unique occasion and pray that you may have more years of service."

Anthony S. Shanley presented a gift donated by the parishioners. Father Kelly, in his acceptance remarks, said the 50 years have been "an honor and a privilege" and gave a short review of the lives of other members of his class.

Increasing Girth Betrays Woman Shoplifter Here

Because her girth increased every time she stopped at a counter in a downtown department store, a colored woman was lodged in the Woman's Bureau as a shoplifter.

Detective Sergt. Leo Murray seized the woman after a three-block chase. He said she had 12 pairs of pants, 3 raincoats and much other small merchandise on her person when he caught her.

Murray stated he watched the woman for several minutes, but never actually saw her pick up anything although she continued to grow larger around the waist. Investigation disclosed, Murray said, a large pair of bloomers into which the woman was dropping the stolen property.

To be arraigned in Police Court this morning, the woman gave her name as Irene Johnson, 37, 1600 block Eleventh street northwest.

Wave of Minor Robberies Here Nets $762 for Criminals in Day

Minor housebreakings and robberies reported to police yesterday netted petty criminals a total of $762 and left one victim in Casualty Hospital with a possible fractured skull from a beating at the hands of hold-up men.

The beaten man is Russell L. Pippen, of 929 L street northwest. While driving near O street and New York avenue early yesterday, he told police, he was forced to the curb by another car and beaten on the face by two white men who robbed him of $72.

Another theft reported yesterday was that of $232 in clothing and $10 in change from the home of William E. Hall, of 2720 Thirty-sixth place northwest.

The most bizarre crime was reported by Floyd Fleishman, manager of the Merchants' Lunch at 1712 Pennsylvania avenue northwest. He said 20 frying chickens had been stolen from the restaurant after burglars forced a rear door.

Clothing valued at $654 was stolen from his store in the 700 block H street northeast, Sylvan Blechman, 700 H street northeast, reported.

Russell L. Pippen, 929 L street northwest, was robbed of $72 by two men who assaulted him on O street northeast near New York avenue.

Stengle Cracks Whip at U.F.W.A.

A. F. G. E. President, at Convention, Says Those Seeking Millenium Through C. I. O. Will Learn Futility of 'Extra-Legal' Ways.

By Scott Hart.

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 12.—A. F. G. E. President Stengle cracked a verbal whip at his organization's rival, the U. F. W. A., here tonight on the eve of the A. F. G. E.'s four-day national convention.

The U. F. W. A., John L. Lewis' Government employe child, he said, will learn in time that "the tried and tested policies of the A. F. G. E. are those upon which substantial building must rest, even though at times we appear to make haste slowly."

In another preconvention action, District of Columbia delegates to the gathering unanimously endorsed Stengle, Secretary Bernice Heffner, Treasurer Cecil Custer and Vice Presidents Michael D. Schaefer and G. Carroll Dimond for re-election. The elections will be held on the last convention day.

The group appointed James B. Burne, of San Francisco, a vice-president, to be their floor leader.

James G. Yaden, president of the District of Columbia department, told The Post he would not stand for re-election. He gave reasons of health for his withdrawal. The election of District officers is fixed for September 24 in Washington.

Obviously, Stengle said, "nothing can be gained by extra-legal methods, and there are no short cuts where laws and regulations having the force of law govern employment. Those who sought the millenium at the end of the C. I. O. rainbow will learn that in time, if indeed they have not already found it out."

To Be Read Tomorrow.

These indictments will be read by Stengle in his account of stewardship before the convention tomorrow. Other lines are: "Various so-called organizations of taxpayers sought, very skillfully, to prey upon the apprehensions of the public generally in connection with mounting public debt and rising taxes, and in this enterprise they had, as is usually the case, the wholehearted assistance of the reactionary press . . . Another thing that our membership should realize is the strength of the opposition to betterment of conditions in the Government service; practically all organized business is out to reduce government expenses; if you will read occasionally the fulminations of the tycoons of modern business in their own publications you will be enlightened, though not very pleasantly, as to their opinions of you and your associates in the Government employ."

He reviewed the cases of the suspended lodges that formed the C. I. O.'s nucleus for Government invasion, and insisted that only those members have quit his organization who were expected to take that course. The gains made for employes during the year were recounted. He believed the passing of the reorganization bill to the next session is advantageous to employes.

Custer May Be Fought.

There was a fairly strong movement of delegates on Philadelphia today. By tomorrow the number is expected to approximate 400. Leaders foresee few fireworks, excepting those in connection with the city's celebration of Constitution Week. But some of the individual delegates have been speaking of the possibilities of a fight to unseat Custer.

There was a scattering of such talk in Washington before the convention even nearly approached. Now it takes the form that Custer should be ousted and the office of treasurer merged with that of secretary.

There is one resolution by Lodge 123, represented by G. V. Wickware, of Washington, to stiffen the oath of the federation officers—to make it more American. The proponents say it is fashioned after the Navy officers' oath.

Representative Ramspeck, chairman of the House Civil Service Committee; Mrs. McMillan, of the Civil Service Commission, and possibly William Green will speak tomorrow. Mayor Wilson of Philadelphia will welcome the delegates at the opening session.

Christian Heurich Gets a 65-Lb. Cake On 95th Birthday

More than 600 employes and friends of Christian Heurich gathered at his Maryland farm yesterday to present him with a 65-pound cake and wish him many more happy years of life, on his ninety-fifth birthday.

As evidence of his continued strength and health, Heurich yesterday blew out the 95 candles atop the cake and personally greeted each of the hundreds of visitors as they arrived at his farm near Hyattsville. While employes and friends drained huge mugs of beer and munched hot dogs and cake, Heurich contented himself with a sip of beer and a small sandwich.

Starting to work in a brewry at 14, Heurich came to the United States a year after the close of the Civil War.

A Billion Dollar Year Is Scored By Amusement

Films and Classic Plays Outdistance Musicals; Burlesque Flops.

New York, Sept. 12 (AP).—The amusement business looked back on a better-than-billion-dollar year today and found it well—with a few fat reservations.

In the 12 months that ended Labor Day eve the flicker public flocked to the movies at the rate of 85,000,000 or better a week—about 4,500,000,000 admissions in all. And at an average price of 22 cents a head. Last season the pace was 80,000,000 weekly.

Broadway "legitimate" box offices took in approximately the same gross as in the 1935-36 season. Vaudeville artists found increased employment in the night clubs, cabarets and unit shows. The outdoor spectacles and carnivals prospered. Burlesque took a beating.

Men who make entertainment an industry thought it over a bit and ventured cautious predictions of increasing gross. Rising costs they thought might cut into net profits. And you can't tell which way the public will jump, anyway.

The movie people thought admissions might be stepped up to 90,000,000 a week. Costs—salaries, wages, film and negative costs—have risen about 30 per cent. Seat prices have not to any great extent, although only today one big chain tried it out on the customers to the tune of about 5 cents apiece. "Consumer" resistance has been felt wherever tickets went up.

Best Since 1929.

For motion pictures the year was the best since 1929, the first real year of sound, when from 90,000,000 to 120,000,000 went to the shows each week. This year's public was more choosy than in that boom year, producers found, and went shopping more for the pictures it wanted.

It got more million-dollar films, as a result. What the trade knows as top-flight pictures rose to about 70 from 50. With the advance in quality, censorship troubles grew less. There were fewer cuts and deletions.

Theater men averred today improved quality brought its reward in longer runs and a better summer business. The big features held over four, five and six weeks instead of moving on at the end of seven days. Summer admissions held to an average of about 70,000,000 weekly, whereas in past years the season has witnessed sharper declines.

Air conditioning played a part in the better summer business, scores more theaters installing the equipment. It helped on Broadway, too, where the "legits" that kept on through the hot days played better houses than the season before.

Statistics weren't so good for the Broadway stage, however, as for the movies.

Stage Hits Decreased.

With about the same gross intake, the percentage of failures increased over the 1935-36 season, hits—any show that runs 100 performances the trade terms a hit—were fewer and the number of New York productions dwindled.

"Billboard," the amusement weekly, which annually compiles the records of the stage, listed only 24 hits against 34 the previous year and 74 in 1925-26, the halcyon season of recent years.

Productions numbered only 125, compared with 138 in 1935-36, commercial premieres dropped to 89 from 103, and and the percentage of failures was up to 76 per cent from 68 per cent.

All was not gloom, however. The dramatic shows that did make the grade averaged 75-day runs, compared with 71 days the preceding year. Revival of classics cheered the men who think quality will save the show business.

They pointed to such successes as "Hamlet," "Richard II," "The Country Wife," "Candida," and others as proof of their contention the public wanted the classics as well as the "turkeys." Two Broadway "Hamlets" provoked a storm of discussion over the merits of the rival performances.

Burlesque Takes the Rap.

As far as burlesque was concerned, the days of the strip-teasers appeared numbered. The burlycue houses in New York were closed, to reopen later with less epidermis showing and the patter purged of much of its suggestiveness.

Strip-teasers applied in vain to the night clubs—girl shows were clothed and the public seemed to like the fancy costuming. Fan dances, and their kind, such as baloon, swan, apple, moth and other near-nude acts, remained in favor, however.

Musicals seemed on the down slide. There were only ten among the commercial premieres, and never more than five running at one time. "Billboard" placed the failure percentage at 45 per cent, against 18 per cent the previous season. The average length of run, it noted, dropped from 164 performances to 128.

Columbia

From Kipling's story of the adventures of a small girl in northern India in the year 1897, the makers of movie magic who guide the destiny of small Shirley Temple have made an intriguing yarn.

Shirley, who is not so small as she once was, neither sings nor dances, unless one counts the brief poignance of "Auld Lang Syne," which she sings without benefit of orchestral accompaniment at the deathbed of her pal, Sergt. McDuff (Victor McLaglen). Her performance, as the fatherless grandchild of gruff old Col. Boots (C. Aubrey Smith), who comes with her attractive mother (June Lang) to the army post where the colonel presides over the activities of a detachment of bagpipe-playing soldiers of the Queen, is little short of superb.

Even those artery-hardened diehards who never shed tears at juvenile sob stuff will find something to interest them. Cesar Romero as the native brigand, Rhoda Kahn, who lives on a high cliff and thumbs his handsome nose at the British, provides some skittish moments when one of his henchmen kidnaps Li'l Missy. The colonel effects her rescue single-handed. And in the meantime Mummy has been romancing with a handsome officer (Michael Whalen). Conclusion: Smiles and pleased expressions while the bagpipes skirl a final skirl. At that is what bagpipes do.

A short newsreel and a sports short are all the supplementaries on the new Columbia bill.

Nelson B. Bell About The Showshops

Realism Is Heightened by Perfected Sound-Track Used in Recording Film Version of 'The Firefly'

Small Midnight Preview Audience Hears Friml Music at Its Best, as Sung by Jeanette MacDonald and Allan Jones; Roadside in Its Last Week; New Master of Ceremonies Headed Here; Theater Notes.

A LITTLE less than a decade ago, this column chattered at great length upon the marvelous advances that had been made in sound recording for the screen.

Our inexpert observations were prompted by the fact that certain pictures had just been released in which the foreground, or close-up, dialogue, noises and commotions inherent in the pictured action came from the screen in greater audible volume than those emanating from a distance. At the time, this was denominated "sound perspective" and was deemed a tremendous step in the cinema's progress as a medium of realistic expression—which it was.

BELL.

It did away with such incongruous scenes, for example, as that memorable one in "The Pagan," in which Ramon Novarro serenaded his Polynesian lady love with a verse or two of his famous "Pagan Love Song," in close-up, then ran across an expansive terrain until he was a mere speck in the distance and repeated the refrain from afar. While the handsome and athletic Senor Novarro covered a half-mile or so in this episode, his voice stood still. That is to say, the "Pagan Love Song" fell upon the audience ear with equal clarity and strength regardless of the distance from which it was sung.

Later attempts were made to overcome this obvious deficiency in the attempt to achieve actuality by instructing the projectionists in the theater booths to step the volume control up and down as the pictured action on the screen might seem to demand. This device worked successfully only to the degree that the projectionist combined the talents of both dramatist and scientist and with results that were never twice alike.

All this now has been overcome. While the scientific perfection of sound recording has been so gradual as perhaps to have been imperceptible to the layman in its successive stages of development, the point has now been reached where the sound track on the film incorporates all of the gradations of volume that would be encountered in actual life under the same circumstances and conditions.

This was definitely and conclusively demonstrated to a small invited audience at a sudden, eleventh-hour, midnight preview of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's production of "The Firefly," starring Jeanette MacDonald, with Allan Jones and Warren William, in Loew's Palace Theater on Saturday night.

The screening was preceded by a brief, informal talk by Lester Isaacs, director of the projection department of the Loew theaters throughout the country, in which it was pointed out that use of the "standard sound track," perfected by Douglas Shearer, chief sound engineer at M-G-M and brother of the illustrious Norma, as exemplified in "The Firefly," represents the highest development yet attained in this branch of picture making. His contention seemed to err only on the side of understatement in the light of subsequent revelations.

"The Firefly" is a picture that should be eagerly awaited by all lovers of music, romance and excitement on the silver sheet. A completely new book has been written around the title, although all of the Friml music and Otto Harbach lyrics have been retained, with one or two added numbers to round out the new narrative.

The present story deals with the time of Napoleon's invasion of Spain and his attempted unseating of the young King Ferdinand. Picturesquely costumed and staged in the modes of the Napoleonic era, the screen operetta is by no means a stodgy "costume drama" in the usual sense. It relates a romantic and melodramatic story of love and the secret service operatives of both Spain and France. It is gloriously sung and magnificently photographed. On Broadway, it is a "road show" at this writing.

This production will be coming along to a Loew screen in the comparatively near future and will be more minutely reviewed then. In the meantime, it may be said, in paraphrase of Al Jolson, that until you have listened to Miss MacDonald, Mr. Jones and their supporting ensembles in this one, "you ain't heard nothin' yet."

The final week of the season at the Roadside Theater seems to be off to a flying start. Tonight's performance of "Murder in the Red Barn," entering the last half of its fortnight's run, is completely sold out to the Young Republicans' Club of Montgomery County, who have chosen the barn theater on the Rockville Pike as the scene of their annual fall rally. Although fair warning is given that there will be no seats available for the general public tonight, the management announces a limited number of seats still to be had for the other nights of the week. By use of a printed ballot folded in each program, patrons are given an opportunity to vote on the list of plays they would like to see performed by the Roadsiders next year.

A late dispatch to this desk from the indefatigable Ray Bell—no relation—of the Loew interests in Washington, bears the heartening tidings that Sammy Walsh, described as a talented young fellow who generates more energy than any three ordinary men, will introduce a new pattern in masters of ceremonies when he appears on the Capitol stage next Friday to introduce an eight-act variety program designed primarily for long and lusty laughs.

Sammy is well known to habitues of the "nighteries" in many cities, having headlined the floor shows of a majority of the night clubs and hotels in this country, sandwiching in theater engagements when not enlivening the night life of the Nation. He is reputedly an "ad libber" of the first water. He builds his own personal contribution to the bill as he goes along, utilizing any impromptu development that seems to contain the genesis of a "gag." He also is reported to be a singer, excellent dancer and versatile "stunt" man.

Master Walsh is only 24 years old, but, like Red Skelton, has been around for a while as an entertainer of the livelier sort. One hears it rumored that he is a nephew, or cousin, or something, of Mrs. Sarah Young, chief booker at the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Exchange, presided over by Sam Wheeler, but I wouldn't know about that. However, I shall try to find out today at the preview of Jimmy Cagney's new picture, "Something to Sing About," being run off for the boys and girls of the drayma desks by Harry Brown of Grand National.

The complete new season—"legitimate" and all—may now open with impunity. That eminent drugless therapist, Dr. Frank T. Shyne, who has saved more stage productions than any other practitioner in Washington, is back from Adirondack and beach summer outings just in time to minister to the ailing among the profession who are afraid they may not be able to go on. Walter Hampden, Charles "Buddy" Rogers, Edmund Lowe, Rudy Vallee, the late Jean Harlow, and Jack Benny are only a few touring stars who have been kept going when such a thing seemed almost impossible. Managers, agents, and the newspaper tribe also are among his patients, which is why Eddie Plohn, of the National, and your reporter collided there recently in an effort to get rid of a few "kinks." The show must go on—but don't ask me why!

Col. James Jeremiah Lake, the Chesterfieldian manager of the Gayety, diffidently lets it be known that one of his proteges, Billy Snyder, was really the originator of the country's newest dance craze, "The Big Apple." According to the good Colonel, Billy evolved the steps, one or two at a time, during the past year as a featured performer in his Black and Gold Room Night Club, over the theater.

For this reason, Jimmy has engaged the slithering Snyder for a week's return engagement and has extended an invitation to the press and general public to see Billy at his club to prove his claim.

Among the laity, a "big apple" a day keeps the doctor hustling!

Repeats Her Earlier Successes

Having scored previously on the same stage as a "single" and as principal comedienne in Gene Ford's production of "Spring Is Here," June Carr this week returns to Loew's Capitol as one of the headline features of Johnny Perkins' "Farewell Frivolities." The durable and sprightly Miss Carr teams with the ample Mr. Perkins in some of the bill's most vigorous intervals of comedy.

Hollywood, Sept. 12.—Idol Chatter: The real reason for the separation of June Lang and Vic Orsatti was in-law trouble. Cited for the Croix de Merite: Jane Withers—asked to donate a trophy at a recent horse show, she specified that her loving cup should go to "the man who takes care of the horses." Barbara Stanwyck does not look like the nervous type, but she loses from 10 to 20 pounds during the production of each of her pictures. Collectors' Note: Basil Rathbone gets ecstatic about Japanese prints. All the studios have banned 16-millimeter cameras on the sets, and the stars are indignant.

JUNE LANG.

Wonder if there is any connection between Roy del Ruth's status as highest-salaried director on the Twentieth Century lot and the fact that he gave Darryl Zanuck his first movie job? Grace Moore has the worst case of trailerities ever seen in these parts. Having built a new house, Miriam Hopkins is now buying out the Mexican pottery dealers. Funny how actors who profess to dislike publicity always spell out their name when introduced to a columnist.

Peas from the same pod: Claudette Colbert and Ann Sothern—in a dark wig. Hollywood's most thrilling real-life story is Errol Flynn's account of his adventures among South Sea cannibals. Today's horrible thought: Imagine the feelings of a dignified college prexy when he sees one of those film-musicals "depicting" life on the campus. You asked so—I am glad to tell you that Dorothy Mackaill is making the London stage.

Talked with Wallace Beery today and heard an amazing and amusing bit of Garbo-lore. Wally had—until it was destroyed by a snow avalanche last winter—a log cabin home, hidden away in the most inaccessible part of the Sierras, miles from the nearest human habitation. "Too bad it was destroyed," Wally mourned. "Garbo used to borrow that shack of mine and spend her vacations there—I could have advertised and charged her fans two-bits admission to see the shrine. "Since you know Garbo well enough to loan her cabins, just what kind of a person is she?" I asked—and Wally laughed. "I don't know Garbo," he said. "Her agent talked to me—I've worked on the same lot with her for nine years and never even met the lady!"

Bob Rose is the ace "stunt man" of the screen. At least once a week for the past 15 years he has risked his life to give you a momentary thrill. Most of his feats look like suicide attempts—watching him do them, you would consider a 10-to-1 bet on his death a business investment. During his career, he has seen 48 other daredevils killed. In one picture, on each of three successive days, a stunter died trying to shoot the rapids of an Alaskan river. Bob did it on the fourth day. He has no nerves—but he does have a sixth sense that is his guardian angel. "That's the reason I'm still alive," he told me today. "I have 'hunches' and I follow them. There are days when I know nothing will go wrong—days when I'm safe doing any stunt.

"There are other days when I can 'smell death' as plainly as you can smell a pot of boiling coffee. On those days, I won't even cross a busy street."

Any attempt to capitalize on the "strip-tease" fame of Gypsy Rose Lee—now re-christened Louis Hovick—seems doomed to failure. First, the women's clubs protested and now a studio plan to garb her in the least the law will allow for one of her forthcoming pictures is checkmated by the lady's modesty—or would you call it modesty? Louise, I hear, says "no" to scanty costumes, because they would distract attention from her acting.

Gayety

"MERRY MODELS." James J. Lake presents the musical production in two acts and 22 scenes, featuring Evelyn Myers and Harry Evanson, supported by Joan De Lee, Sally Parker, Dorothy Sevier, Harry Seymour, Harry Myers, Ben Hamilton, Max DuVal, Cornish and Dean and the Dancing Models. Produced by Frank Bryant; staged by James J. Lake. Reviewed Sunday matinee by Art John, BCAA.

Good entertainment in the way of comedy, song-and-dance and pretty girls is to be seen in the current offering at the Gayety.

Evelyn Myers, a platinum blonde of unusual charm who possesses unusual ability as a dancer, is the featured female beauty and one well chosen for the role. This young woman is seen in several musical specialities which are cleverly rendered, one of her best efforts being the "Dance of Cellophane."

The comedy interludes fairly bulge with laughter and hilarity, the credit going to Harry Evanson, Harry Seymour and Harry Meyers. This trio of funny men have much to give in the way of merry wit.

One of the best things on the bill, however, is the hill billy quartet consisting of the above-mentioned trio and Max Duway of songs not often heard and just about stop the show.

Dancing honors go to Sally Parker, a petite miss whose nimble feet enhance many of the musical presentations, while the singing of Ben Hamilton is pleasant on the ear and popular in demand.

Among those who contribute many pleasant moments are Cornish and Dean, a splendid tap-dancing team; Dorothy Sevier, whose voice and work in the sketches is quite worthwhile, and a comely young chorus who show real training and ability in their routines. The entire production is excellently mounted and costumed.

Trans-Lux

The grim specter of war, spilling its explosives in the Far East and the Mediterranean Sea, takes the camera spotlight on the new Trans-Lux program. Pathe newsmen got into the Shanghai sector and then got out again with some remarkable pictures depicting the flight of Chinese refugees amid streets strewn with dead comrades, mowed down by straffing Jap planes that continue the aerial deluge of death missiles. And the news shots from Europe present a still more terrible picture: Germany, Italy, Russia, France and Britain, armed to the teeth, ready to leap at no notice, all trying to keep dynamite from exploding over the "pirate" sub incidents. The pictures are unusual and tell their own tale.

On the home news front, summer is merging into fall with two beauty contests running neck and neck, milady's head-gear for autumn, babies going back to clothes, Alice Faye and Tony Martin married, the South Boston, Va., tobacco festival (with a queen, of course) and the District girls' athletic meet at Roosevelt stadium as a last spree before school opens.

Donald Duck has gone Spanish in a big way, while Universal's "Stranger Than Fiction" provides the best novelty of the week, a New York restaurant where you park your watch at the door to escape the magnetic currents that play through the eatery, the waves coming from a high-power electric generating plant next door.

The sports menu is alive with yacht races, swimming meets (Lenore Wingard winning again), New York police athletic carnival for boys, rodeo spills, the Cramm-Bitsy Grant tennis tilt, girl yachters, and the Pike's Pike auto sprint, with of course, a touch of ski-ing, football and ice hockey. Winter's nearing!

Little

"Winterset," the finely executed film version of Maxwell Anderson's grim drama of protest, was revived at the Little Theater yesterday as chief feature of the new week's photoplay bill, with Burgess Meredith, Margo and Eduardo Ciannelli in the roles they created in the New York stage production.

In this subject is revealed a drama of squalid life in the murk shadows of a lower New York bridgehead, in which a penniless youth seeks to run to earth the culprits who caused the legal death of his father for a crime of which he was innocent. Into the warp and woof of the story has been woven a vivid recital of the handicaps that encumber the underprivileged in their futile protest against the shortcomings of present-day "justice." In essence, "Winterset" is a gangster drama, treated with the blank-verse realism of poetic writing—a circumstance that was deemed its principal defect by some who felt, at the time of its original production, that the play exalted its subject matter beyond its legitimate worth. This is a stand with which this department never has been in sympathy.

Our chief objection to the picture lies in the fact that the film substitutes for the logical tragedy of the stage play's climax a denatured sop to the tastes of those who demand a "happy ending."

Burgess Meredith, as the groping youth; Margo, in the ingenuous part of the slum girl with whom he falls in love, and Eduardo Ciannelli, the murderous underworld leader, repeat the successful portrayals they brought to "Winterset" on the boards. They are supported by an able cast, led by Edward Ellis, as the judge whose brooding destroyed his mind, the character first acted by Richard Bennett.

The bill is completed by the customary short-reel subjects and pictured news events.

Belasco

Following last Saturday night's special revival presentation of King Vidor's 1934 production of "Our Daily Bread," one of the celebrated films of its year, under the sponsorship of the District Cooperative League, the long-dark Belasco Theater opened its regular season yesterday with a repeat engagement of "Birth," the social hygiene picture first presented on the same screen under the title of "Sins of Love."

Sex truths are expounded with some discretion in this subject, which upon its first Washington showing was screened for segregated audiences. It still is restricted to the gaze of adult patrons only.

In conjunction with the showing of "Birth" there is presented an illuminating talk on the importance of the matters involved by the lecturer known as "radio's friendly adviser," the "man with 1,000 experiences," who appears in person on the stage.

A companion feature of the inaugural bill is "Eat 'Em Alive," a quasi-sensational film item performed by a cast of alien actors.

CADETS GET DOWN TO GRID WORK

NATS WIN OPENER, 2 TO 1, BUT DROP NIGHTCAP; CHASE STOPS YANKEES; SINGTON HITS HOME RUN

Terry's Men Win Behind Cliff Melton

Drop Nightcap, 6 to 4; Chicago Takes 1st, But Loses Final.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Sept. 12.—The league-leading New York Giants could do no better than split with the fifth-place Boston Bees today, and although they dropped their final series of the season in Boston, two games to one, they maintained their game-and-a-half margin over the second-place Chicago Cubs, who divided with Pittsburgh.

A crowd of 33,275, second largest of the season in the National League park, saw Cliff Melton, Giants' rookie southpaw, spellbind the Bees for the fourth time this season in the opener, 3 to 1. For the sult of a sterling five-hitter. Jim Turner then came back in the nightcap to set down the New Yorkers for the third time this year, 6 to 4. Although he failed to finish, Turner received credit for the victory, his seventeenth against 9 defeats.

Fighting desperately to carry off the second contest and add a precious game to their lead—for the scoreboard showed the Cubs trailing in their nightcap—the Giants made a valiant but futile effort in the eighth to overcome Boston's 5-0 lead.

They pounded over four runs to trail by only one, filled the bases with two out, and saw the count reach three balls and no strikes on Jo-Jo Moore, one of their best batters, in a pinch.

Cubs and Pirates Divide Two Games

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, Sept. 12.—The Chicago Cubs split a double-header with Pittsburgh today and stood still in the hot National League pennant race.

The Cubs won the opener, 5 to 0, and dropped the nightcap, 2-4. New York likewise split with Boston and retained its 1½-game lead.

Jim Tobin, big right-hander of the Pirates, held the Chicago Cubs to seven scattered hits in the second game.

Tigers Beat Chisox And Capture Series

Chicago, Sept. 12. — Tommy Bridges held the Chicago White Sox to three hits today to give the Detroit Tigers a 4-to-0 victory and a clean sweep of the series.

The triumph moved the Tigers four games ahead of the Sox in the battle for second place. The Sox hit only three balls to the outfield. It was Bridges' thirteenth win of the season.

The Tigers made 15 hits off Vernon Kennedy, Thornton Lee and Bill Cox, four of them by Gerald Walker, who doubled once and singled three times.

The game was watched by 15,000 fans.

HARRY HASKIN, who probably teethed on a ring post, is back in town, having been in Detroit for several weeks . . . and says that after watching him work in the auto city he thinks HENRY ARMSTRONG, the colored featherweight who boxed here last month, is the greatest fighter in the world today, pound for pound . . . but HARRY won't pick him to win the title from PETEY SARRON when they meet in October . . . it's a matter of style, he avers . . . HARRY says he thinks it's a sporting thing that BOB MAY, the manager of BOB TOW, may do . . . if he turns TOW'S contract over to a certain New York handler . . . who may be able to do more for the Alexandria bus driver through his Gotham prestige . . .

If you, as I, have been wondering all these years what NAGURSKI, who rules the heavyweight division of the wrestling world under the name of BRONKO, was really christened . . . you can cease immediately . . . here 'tis . . . he was christened BRONKO (ha, fooled you) . . . yep, where he comes from the name is as common as TOM, DICK, or HARRY . . . well, almost as common . . . anyway . . . when CARL REYNOLDS, former White Sox, Red Sox and Washington outfielder, who was declared through in the American League, was bought by the Cubs to bolster their backsliding team, it merely bore out SHIRLEY POVICH'S contention . . . that "when you're washed up in the American, you can still jump over into the National League and play ball for five more years."

Randle's Horses Win Meadowbrook Events

Oaktown, Va., Sportsman's Entries Capture Eight of 14 Classes at Knights of Columbus Show; Black Caddy Takes Jumper Honors.

By Jack Munhall.

Blue bloods owned by U. S. Randle, slender, dark sportsman from Oaktown, Va., completely dominated the third annual Columbus Horse Show held all day yesterday before some 2,000 horse lovers on the spacious Meadowbrook Show Grounds on the East-West highway.

Randle's Claws annexed the hunter championship while the jumper championship was captured by Black Caddy, owned by Fred Hughes, jr., of Bradley Farms, Chevy Chase, Md. Reserve hunter championship was taken by Modern Melody, entry of Mrs. W. H. McDowell, a local horse enthusiast, and the reserve jumper championship was awarded to Red Cloud, owned by the Fort Myer Horse Association.

Horses owned by Randle were victorious in eight of the 14 events staged. Claws, a long-limbed bay, personally accounted for six of these triumphs receiving the nod of the judges in the hunter hacks, working hunter stakes, road hacks, ladies hunters, junior hunters and the Corinthian events. The 8-year-old gelding also took third place in the model hunters group.

Black Caddy gained the jumper crown with blue ribbons in three events, handy jumpers, the scurry and junior jumpers.

Randle thrilled the crowd with his superb horsemanship on several occasions. Late in the afternoon when the sun was sending a piercing red glare directly into the eyes of horses jumping the outside course hurdles in the Working Hunter Stakes, the debonair, mustached scion proved his worth. Though almost every predecessor's mount either stumbled or refused these sun-swept jumps, Randle skillfully guided the smooth-gaited Claws over the 3½-foot hurdles without a single fault.

Washingtonians fared much better in yesterday's show than in the Fairfax events held Saturday. Brill, owned by W. C. Eacho, took honors in the model hunter division and the aforesaid Modern Melody showed well indeed under the colors of Mrs. McDowell.

College Games Are Won in the Summer

By Shirley Povich.

In case you don't know it, college football games are won and lost in those summer months, when the campus is dark, the faculty is on leave and the coaching staff is snooping among the steel mills, the coal mines, the road gangs and the lifeguard towers—snooping to conquer a likely-looking running guard or No. 2 back.

By this time it is pretty well established that football players are not born or made—they are hired, and on the efficiency of Old Mazuma's scouting staff, its argumentative powers, directly depends the success or failure of next fall's football team.

POVICH.

At South Bend and other points where Notre Dame graduates have succeeded to coaching jobs, they swear by the Rockne system as the best guarantee of football success. Most of the dissenters point with pride to their Warner system of football and at Minnesota they argue all day that the Bierman system, with a dash of both Rockne and Warner, is best. But if every coach in the land were to take their hair down and confess all, they'd say that one system counts above all others—the human system.

* * * *

Thus it is that throughout the summer coaches prowl among the youths of the Nation, seeking out particularly those lads of heft and brawn who are at manual labor. And with persuasiveness in their voice and a bright picture of life on the campus at old Siwash, where football players are the little tin athletes, the football scouts lasso the young buckos.

* * * *

But it is an old game and the football-playing youths are wising up. No easy prey, now, is the lad who was a standout in high school or prep school football. Too numerous are the football scouts with their attractive offers. The kids are no longer dazzled by the pretty picture of life on the campus and free meals and tuition. Competition among the scouts is too great.

* * * *

How about that case at George Washington University a few years back, when Colonial coaches thought they had all ready for delivery the best running back ever to tear off a touchdown run in Oklahoma prep school ranks? He had promised to report on Labor Day for early practice and when he was two days overdue G. W. U. coaches were rightfully worried. Finally, a wire to the lad brought an answer. An another Eastern school had made him a better offer, but he'd still enroll at G. W. if they'd pay the train fare and living expenses of his wife as well as himself.

Were it not for the long arm of coincidence, Virginia Polytechnic Institute, not Duke University, would be boasting of the feats of the talented Ace Parker during the past four seasons. For Parker was destined to matriculate at V. P. I. in the fall of 1933.

Gomez Halts Griffs With 5 Hits in Final

Ray Phebus Allows But 6 Safeties; DiMaggio Gets His 42d.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Yankee Stadium, New York, Sept. 12.—Before a throng of 48,725 fans Manager Bucky Harris unveiled his two rookie pitching sensations—Ken Chase and Ray Phebus—in this huge baseball plant this afternoon and at the finish of two tense struggles with the Yankees the two rookies were still sensations.

Chase alone could claim a victory over the Yanks—a thrilling 2-1 triumph that brought down upon his ears even the plaudits of hostile New York fans—but Phebus, in defeat, lacked little of Chase's effectiveness.

Following Chase's conquest of the Yankees in the opener, Manager Harris sent young Phebus out to make it unanimous for the Nats and it was a six-hit game that the young right hander pitched. But he bumped into a first-inning home run by Joe DiMaggio and a devastating single by Lou Gehrig in the fourth and lost a 2-1 decision to the Yanks.

The two Washington rookies tied up with two of the Yankees, proudest pitching boasts in the brilliant pair of mound battles. Chase, the reformed milkman from upper New York State who had numbered Charley Ruffing, of the Yankees, among his victims during a lately sensational string of victories, met up with Ruffing again today—and outpitched him.

Phebus, who like Chase came up to the Nats from Chattanooga and had broken in with a flourish by holding the Red Sox to one hit last week, encountered Lefty Gomez as his pitching foe in the second game and went down to defeat only because the Nats could stir up only five hits and one run against Gomez.

In halting brusquely a string of eight victories by the Yankees over the Nats in Yankee Stadium, young Chase judiciously scattered the seven hits he gave up to the New Yorkers, holding DiMaggio and Gehrig hitless.

Freddie Sington and Johnny Stone produced the hits that beat Ruffing in that opener. Big Sington wiped out the Yankees' 1-to-0 lead in the seventh inning when, with the count of one ball and one strike against him, he swatted one of Ruffing's serves on a line into the leftfield seats for a home run.

Stone was the hero of the Nats' winning uprising against Ruffing in the eighth. With one out, Almada had singled to right and Lewis had drawn a walk. Travis fanned for the second out and then Stone slashed a line drive into leftfield that bounced over the low wall guarding the bleachers and evolved as an automatic two-bagger that scored Almada with the winning run. It was the fifth and last hit off Ruffing.

But all the while Chase was giv-

Indians Take 2 Games; Allen Wins His 11th

Cleveland, Sept. 12.—Johnny Allen scored his eleventh straight victory of the season without a defeat today in the second game of a double-header with the St. Louis Browns, the Cleveland Indians winning the game, 6 to 1, after taking the opener, 6 to 3.

Allen allowed only four hits, two of which were of the scratch variety. The Browns got their lone run off the big right-hander in the third inning when Van Atta beat out a bunt, Carey sacrificed, and Bell singled to drive in the marker.

The Indians won the game in the same inning with a four-run outburst. Hale doubled and Becker walked. They moved along on Allen's infield out and Hale scored on Lary's single. Kroner singled, scoring Becker. Averill walked to fill the bases and, after Trosky fanned, Solters singled to drive in two runs.

Hal Trosky's twenty-eighth home run of the season with Averill on base broke a 3-to-3 tie in the seventh inning of the first game. Earlier in the game Averill also hit a homer, his twentieth of the season.

Dear Al:

The camera didn't do right by the Benningites last week. We were beaten out by the negatives in many races and on one day we lost four decisions. However, they couldn't have gotten Aneroid into the picture with an aerial photograph. Jockey Noboy Jacobs says, "O. K. and Good Luck" to all his friends in District of Columbia. Jockey postal cards from Saratoga. Bob Massey, Washington handicapper, is on the radio in New England. The Daily Sporting News, past performance sheet, has changed to pink paper. Despite published reports to the contrary, Walter O'Hara did not use all the words in his paper. It was printed "—— liar." Clocker Mike can't be doing so well at Timonium. He wired for eating money that should carry him well into the Havre de Grace meeting. Maybe they have slot machines at that Timonium Fair. My Frederick, Md., operative writes that the partnership of W. L. Brann and R. S. Castle in the Brancastle Farm at Walkersville, Md., has been dissolved. Castle is retiring from horse racing to devote his time to other activities. Brann becomes the sole owner and in the future horses which have been running in the Branncastle Farm colors will compete under the name of W. L. Brann. Challenger II, a son of Swynford, is the farm's sire. The Maryland major season opens on Friday at Havre de Grace. Here's hoping this isn't a blue Monday. BILL.

First race—Perjured, with the alert Leishman to do the riding, appears nicely placed in the day's opener. Has the speed of the party, I do believe. Mary Senate has some good races and should not be far out of it. Fly Time has an inside post and is dangerous.

Second race—Flaming Belle gets in with a feather impost and an inexperienced rider. However, she has plenty of foot and I'm going to string along. Joda is an in and outer and probably will be a keen factor. Nancy Mae to take care of the others.

Third race—Sir Rose, a front runner of merit, must carry top weight of 117 pounds, but has won before with heavy assignments. I believe this one is best. Kimpton has improved of late. Palm Island has worked well and should be in the thick of it.

Fourth race—Bellum likes the sprint route. Carries quite a package in that 119 pounds, but I believe she will overcome the handicap. Victorious Ann has speed on occasions and looms as the one to beat. Masked Gal is, by no means, outclassed.

Fifth race—Hope Eternal is more than a hope in this field. Breaks off the rail and may make every post a winning one. Boston Mary and Buster Boy, the latter a recent winner, to take the other money places.

Sixth race—More Pep was well meant last out and missed. Indicated a return to good form by the effort, however. Kindacorn, a beaten favorite in that most recent start, is formidable and dangerous. Swiftlet to annex the third money.

Seventh race—Marvel Play finds conditions that suit in this field. Needs only intelligent handling. Traggat and Whippercracker will be ready to battle it out if the top one makes mistakes.

Eighth race—Lugano and Out of Step are a close fit in the day's finale. Dian is the likely favorite, but I believe the chief contention will be offered by the first two.

Best bet—Hope Eternal.

Welsh Wins, Leads Field In Net Play

Playground Department Tourney Passes Into Third Round.

By Bob Garrison.

Devoid of upsets but not of sparkling tennis, the Playground Department's annual tournament passed through the first and second rounds yesterday on the Potomac Park courts as a field of 64 players, seeking Barney Welsh's crown, was trimmed to an elite 16.

Led by Welsh, of Rockville, Md., who although unscheduled arranged to play his second-round match with Bernard Blankin and advanced into the third round, by virtue of a 6—4, 6—2 victory, seeded players advanced with expected ease.

Bill (Baron) Breese, former Harvard net ace, experienced little difficulty in moving past Arnold Freshman, 6—3, 6—3; Tony Latona defeated Don Bent, 6—4, 6—2, and Hy Ritzenberg won the day's longest match from Allen Staubly, 7—5, 9—11, 6—3, to lead the field.

Adair Wins.

Buddy Adair, of the Edgmoor Club, playing in brilliant style, eliminated Charles Heacock in straight sets, 6—3, 9—7. Hardly granted a set in a match with the former Missouri Valley Conference champion, stocky Adair, still a junior performer, made quick work of Heacock, sweeping through the first set, then outlasting his older opponent to win.

Leonard Sokol, the Burroughs Playground champion and also a junior performer, offered a fine repertoire of strokes in his first round match to baffle Mariano Erana, veteran Filipino player, in three sets, 3—6, 6—4, 8—6, before he was eliminated by suave Davie Johnsen, another junior star, in the second round, 6—4, 6—2.

Play in the singles is not scheduled until tomorrow, as the doubles tournament, entered by the best teams to grace a first round pairing list here this season, gets under way on the same courts at 5 p. m. today.

Welsh-McElvenny No. 1.

Headed by Barney Welsh and his partner, Ralph McElvenny, defending champions, who are top-seeded, the field will see several new combinations in action. Bill Breese and Tony Latona are paired and have been given the No. 3 rating behind the naval duo, Lieuts. Jim Farrin and Bill Howard.

Davie Johnsen is teamed with Hugh Lynch and received the No. 4 seeding. Although each is a fine doubles player, this will be the first time the two, who opposed each other in the Middle Atlantic Doubles finals, have paired, making their selection a dubious one. This forced the formidable team of Ed Mather-Lieut. Stanley K. Robinson to compete without the honor of a seeding.

First Round Matches. Results.

Blankin defeated Seigel, 7—5, 6—4; Sokol defeated Erana, 3—6, 6—4, 8—5; Freshman defeated McDowell, 6—0, 7—5; Howell defeated Herrshoff, 6—4, 6—4; Heacock defeated St. Lawrence, 6—1, 6—3; Adair defeated Dr. Bartell, 6—0, 6—2; Smith defeated O'Neill, 6—1, 6—2; Dennis defeated Menkoff, 8—6, 6—3; Pierce defeated Murdock, 6—1, 6—4; Bent defeated Gelland, 6—2, 6—3; Garber defeated Topping, 6—1, 6—0; Botts defeated Glasmire, 6—1, 6—3, 8—6.

69's by Cox and Spencer Pace Argyle Matches

MacKenzie Next at 74; Giants Win

Woodmont Team Bows; Yoder Takes Medal; Mrs. Emge Wins.

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Firing individual 69s and pairing for a best ball of 63, nine under par, Wiffy Cox, Kenwood, and Cliff Spencer, Beaver Dam, tied for the sweepstakes prize and defeated George Diffenbaugh and Bob Barnett, 6 and 4, yesterday at Argyle, thrilling a Sunday exhibition crowd of 1,000 people with their sub-par shooting.

In the other match Leo Walper and Al Treder halved the final hole in bogey 5s and preserved a one-up margin over Mel Shorey and Roland MacKenzie. Trailing the co-leaders in the individual scoring were MacKenzie, with a two over par, 74; Barnett and Walper at 75; Shorey, 78; Treder, 79, and Diffenbaugh, 81.

Cox and Spencer each included three-under regulation nines of 33 and tacked them onto par 36s in recording the sub-70 scores. Spencer was out in 33, holing an approach on the second hole for an eagle and adding birdies on three and seven.

Cox, out in 36, scored six 4s and three treys on the return trip, with an eagle 3 on the third hole and birdies on one and six. He was over on the par-3 eighth hole.

Walper was two under par for 12 holes, including five birdies, but went five over on the final six to run his score to 75. Thirteen pars and a birdie dotted Barnett's card. MacKenzie took 38 strokes on the outgoing nine, but was three under par for the first five holes of the second trip, only to falter on six and nine and finish with a 74.

Spencer, a symphony in white, Cox and MacKenzie thrilled the crowd with tee shots that virtually turned the Silver Spring layout into a drive and pitch course, but lost several strokes each by over and under playing several shots. It was the first time around the course for several of the players.

Gude Takes Singles Title On Potomac

Wins Sculls Championship Over Stewart in Club Regatta.

By Daniel F. Craig.

Sculling over a half-mile course in 2 minutes 45 seconds, Granville Gude won the Potomac River singles championship for the fourteenth consecutive year this afternoon as Potomac Boat Club members swept down the muddy Potomac above Key Bridge to take every event of their sixty-eighth annual regatta with the Old Dominion Boat Club, of Alexandria.

Trailing Gude by one length came Bill Stewart, of Potomac, with Bob Duncan third and Ernie Millar fourth.

A strong Potomac "eight" led all the way to win by one and a half lengths over the Alexandrians, while a four-oared gig, beaten last month by Old Dominion, manned their sweeps with a vengeance to trim the Virginians by one-half length.

At the oars in Potomac's victorious "eight" were Granville Gude, Paul Lannigan, Bill Stewart, James Burch, Michael Poluhoff, Paul Kyle, Dave Knox, Bob Duncan and Jerry Lawler, coxswain.

Sixteen-year-old Paul Lannigan, of Potomac, won the "tin can singles sweepstakes" in 3 minutes 30 seconds to turn back a late threat from youthful James Burch, jr., who placed second.

Aubrey Bogley and James Burch, sr., both former canoe champions, gave spectators a splashing performance by winning the "tandem overboard canoe race," and scored in a special repeat exhibition for the newsreels.

Corr Captures Midget Title in City League

Dick Rozelle Allows Only One Scratch Hit as the Bicycle Shop Wins From Deoudes, 11-2; Georgetown Ties for B Unlimited Lead.

By Jack Munhall.

One league championship was conclusively decided and two second-half winners were determined as a result of yesterday's games in the National City Baseball League.

Heurich Brewers annexed the second-half pennant in the A unlimited section by defeating Rose Liquor, first-half winner, 6-3, on the strength of some excellent relief flinging by Ev Russell.

Corr Bicycle Shop won the midget title, swamping George Deoudes, 11-2, for its second consecutive victory in the play-off series and in the B unlimited section Read Pharmacy vaulted from a second-place deadlock with Georgetown A. C. into a tie for the league lead with New Deal by trimming Georgetown, 6-3.

Heurich and Rose clash next Sunday in the first of a three-game play-off series to decide the A championship, while Read and New Deal will play a single game to decide the second-half winner. If New Deal, which won the first half, defeats the Pharmacymen it will be the B champion with no further ado. But if Read is the victor a three-game play-off series starting the Sunday next will be scheduled to settle the B sectional titlist.

The Heurich outfit was forced to pull a great comeback in defeating the Liquor Shop yesterday for it was on the short end of a 3-to-1 score as early as the first inning, in which Rose shelled Randy Heflin, husky Fredericksburg schoolboy star, from the mound before he could retire the necessary three men.

But it proved a bad move for in came Russell, an outfielder, occasionally converted to pitcher, to blank Rose the remainder of the battle.

Meanwhile the Beermen slowly snapped from their hitting futilities to tie the game at 3-to-3 in the sixth and then ice it with a pair of tallies in the seventh and one in the eighth. Thompson, center fielder, led Heurich at bat connecting for a brace of triples.

Read gained its victory over Georgetown also by belated rallies. The losers hopped to a 4-to-2 lead in the first inning when the hitters threatened to chase Tom Boggs, Read ace, from the hill. In the end, however, Boggs had the say for he allowed only one run from the first on, that in the seventh when the game was well in hand. Boggs fanned 7. Glenn Whitt, shooting for his fifth straight league victory was the losing hurler.

The Deoudes-Corr affair was no contest because while the Bicyclemen were furiously pedaling out 14 hits to all sectors of the field, Dick Rozelle, responsible for Corr's previous triumph over the Celerymen, allowed Deoudes but one hit, a scratch bunt by Lewis. Wiles was the batting star with three hits in five trips.

In the junior league J. C. Flood continued its surge to the second-half title blasting the hapless Browdy's nine, 13-2, as Nick Nikalson pitched one-hit ball and struck out 11.

George's Radio dropped Police Boys Club, No. 5, from second position, upsetting it, 11-2, in a six-inning affair behind five-hit pitching by Lee Lusby.

Police Boys Club, No. 4, went into second place and set the stage for its game with the leading Flood nine next Sunday by winning from Nick Bombard, 9-6. Flood has five consecutive victories, while Police 5 has been beaten once in five games.

GRANVILLE GUDE,

Umps Busy As Dodgers, Phils Divide

Grimes, Camilli Tossed; Phils Win Opener, 4-3; Drop 2d, 9-5.

By the Associated Press.

Brooklyn, Sept. 12.—The umpires were the busiest men on the field today as the Dodgers and the Phillies split a double-header.

Things were quiet during the first game, which the Phillies took 4 to 3 in ten innings when Johnny Moore singled home with the winning run during a two-run splurge in the extra frame to give Lefty Lamaster his thirteenth pitching victory of the season.

But both sides made up for it in the nightcap, which the Dodgers took 9 to 5 to strengthen their grip on sixth place in the National League.

Benefit Group To Urge Alien Bars at Parley

Sons and Daughters of Liberty to Open Two-Day Session Tomorrow.

More than 200 Sons and Daughters of Liberty will open sessions in the Hotel Washington tomorrow to discuss such issues as restriction of immigration, enforcement of the deportation act and the registration of aliens.

The program to continue through two days will constitute the patriotic society's sixtieth meeting, George W. McFarland, of Trenton, N. J., national treasurer, declared last night.

Mrs. Bertha Holman, national councilor, arrived yesterday from Point Pleasant, N. J., to preside over the sessions. She will also have charge of a meeting of the officers today.

McFarland said a report to be brought in tomorrow by Matthew Kenney, of Philadelphia, national secretary, will show that the organization has 69,336 members in 23 States. The group is organized to disburse death and funeral benefits.

A highlight of the meeting will be a banquet tomorrow night in the Washington Hotel.

"Our organization feels that immigration in this country should be further restricted," said McFarland, "until aliens already here are better assimilated by our American population."

The treasurer charged the Government with lax enforcement of the existing deportation act.

U. S. Constitution 'No Rubber Ball,' Says Van Devanter

Colorado Springs, Colo., Sept. 11 (AP).—Willis Van Devanter, recently-retired United States Supreme Court justice, declared, "The Constitution is not a rubber ball to be bounced around," in an address to the annual Colorado Bar Association banquet tonight.

Judge Van Devanter, although he did not comment directly on the merits of the Supreme Court reorganization issue, said, "Nothing has arisen thus far which necessitates a change in the Constitution of this country."

He added he believed the court reorganization controversy "has run its course, and the United States Supreme Court is still triumphant in the land."

Italo-Nazi Front Seen as U. S. Peril

New York, Sept. 12 (AP).—Frank C. Hanighen, foreign affairs student, suggested today that Nazi and Fascist groups in this country "might have to be taken seriously" if the German-Italian co-operation in Europe "should be extended to the United States."

Writing in the edition of the magazine Foreign Affairs to be published tomorrow, Hanighen discounts any danger of a "direct threat to the stability of the American Government" through activities of the individual organizations or the Communist group.

New York, Sept. 12 (AP).—Richard Ely, prominent New York attorney, counsel for John Wanamaker, and director of the real estate firm of Horace S. Ely & Co., died today at his summer home in Old Lyme, Conn. He was 57.

Labor to Draw Record Share Of U. S. Income

Nation to Pay Workers 77 Per Cent of Cash During 1937.

By the Associated Press.

The Commerce Department estimated yesterday that labor will receive the largest slice on record of the national income during 1937.

National income is expected to aggregate about $70,000,000,000 this year, an increase of 12 per cent over last year but about 13 per cent under 1929.

The country's workers received $41,250,000,000, or 65.5 per cent, of last year's $62,056,000,000 income. This was a new percentage high since the Commerce Department first started keeping tab on income distribution in 1929.

Officials said employes' compensation undoubtedly will increase further this year because of fattened pay envelopes given workers in the steel, automobile and other industries.

They estimated that average per-capita income to all employes will rise above the $1,300 mark, compared with $1,244 last year and $1,450 in 1929.

Salaried employes—the so-called "white collar workers"—probably will receive more than $2,400 per capita, compared with $2,333 in 1936 and $2,560 in 1929.

The rise in total and per-capita income, however, will be offset in part by price increases since last year.

Against the greater share of national income going to labor, the proportion disbursed in dividend payments may drop off slightly.

Corporate investors pocketed $4,573,000,000 in dividends last year, or 7.4 per cent of total income. Officials said that although total dividends this year may equal or exceed those of 1936, these payments probably will account for a smaller percentage of aggregate income.

Should total national income continue its present upward curve, it would reach the 1929 level of $78,174,000,000 next year.

However, a return to 1929 dollar income would not mean restoration of 1929 living standards because there has been a substantial increase in the population since that year.

Campaign Books' Sale Arouses Holt

By the Associated Press.

Senator Rush Holt (Democrat), West Virginia, said yesterday Congress should "demand" an opinion from Attorney General Cummings whether the sale of Democratic campaign books violates the Federal corrupt practices act.

Holt made his statement after the Democratic National Committee reported to the clerk of the House of Representatives Saturday that sales of the book from May 31 to August 31 of this year amounted to more than $129,287.

"Congress should get an opinion from the Attorney General as to whether this is a violation of the corrupt practices act," Holt told reporters. "If his opinion says no, then Congress should amend the act."

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively
A Special Correspondent.

Week's Decline Is the Most Severe in Four Years; Business Doubts Arise.

New York, Sept. 12.—Last week proved to be a great disappointment to those who had hoped for financial market improvement and a business pickup with the traditional ending of the holiday season which Labor Day brings. Activity in the stock market increased, to be sure, but it rose on heavy selling which sent prices down further in a corresponding length of time than has been done since the long bull market got under way two or three years ago.

Stock turnover on the four full trading days this week averaged about 2,000,000 shares daily, and the decline in prices for many of the leading stocks from the previous week's close reached 10 to 20 points or more.

The Government bond market, although probably supported at times by the Treasury, which announced a conversion offer for the next tax date maturities, was rather weak and commodities declined. Cotton went down to the lowest prices since 1933, and grains weakened as reports of better growing weather in other areas appeared, but the fall was interrupted by a rise on the war scare.

Lack of Confidence.

It is futile to try to appraise the various factors at work in securities markets. The week's break began with the plausible excuse of a more menacing situation in the Far East and in the Mediterranean area, but while the most was made of the war scare, alarm felt in Europe seemed less than it was here, and the passing of the first shivers did not bring much benefit to the market. In any event prices went down sharply without much liquidation pressure; comparatively they fell because of the widespread lack of confidence in the near term business position.

The stock market gave another illustration of what it is liable to do—that is, move fitfully—in response to almost anything that spurs it in the direction in which it is moving. Since the fall in prices last spring no recovery of moment has taken place, and the drying up of activity has strongly suggested an attempt to discount some business recession. Some recession already has taken place, partly because of the piling up of inventories against higher costs and partly because of consumer resistance to higher selling prices.

Unsound Elements.

It appears that hopes have been geared too high for an autumn trade revival; but the stock market may be too pessimistic in predicting a considerable further decline in activity. Large crops selling at high prices are still a good foundation for autumn and winter business. The Government is strongly committed to a cheap money policy. World trade, in spite of the upsets of war, is still on the increase. Stocks probably went up faster than conditions warranted, and they are just as likely to go down too far, if they have not already done so; they are not always true prophets.

While trying to look on the sunny side, it is no good glinking the fact that no genuine confidence in business can be established so long as present policies are pursued. Business wants to know what to expect from fiscal policy, for the budget cannot go unbalanced indefinitely without carrying ruinous direct taxation in the way of monetary inflation. Business men also would like to know just how much longer and how far they are to be harried simply because they are in business for profit, and whether they or the labor unions are to run industry. We have been dancing dizzily four years, and haven't yet paid the fiddler much on account.

Federal Survey Sought to Aid Jobless Elders

Administration Expected to Ask Congress for Financing.

By the Associated Press.

Informed officials predicted yesterday the Administration will ask Congress to finance a survey of unemployment among the middle-aged.

The tendency to exclude the man over 45 years from industrial and commercial employment would be the chief concern of the survey.

Except for a sprinkling of private agencies campaigning in scattered sections against middle-aged employment barriers, Government officials said they knew of no concerted effort being made to provide special help for men let out of industry when they reach the years of 45 or 50.

Secretary Perkins has championed the efficiency of the middle-aged men. She thrust the issue before the Nation again last Labor Day in a speech against certain employers' hiring policies.

She said present hiring and firing policies are "a menace and terror to thousands of family breadwinners."

"It is to be hoped that before we observe another Labor Day," she said, "the Department of Labor will be able to study and report upon the nature and effect of any economic conditions or statutory provisions which may tend to produce unfair or unequitable discrimination on the basis of age in obtaining and retaining employment in public service and private industry."

In 1933, after the Civil Service Commission had raised the age limits on Government employment, Miss Perkins appealed to department heads not to discriminate against men and women applicants because they were 40 years of age or older.

Chain Store Sales Drop Below Average

New York, Sept. 12.—The rate of increase in chain store sales over a year ago continues to narrow, with August totals sharply lower than the average of recent months. The first 25 chains to report for last month, according to the monthly survey issued yesterday by Childs, Jeffries & Thorndike, Inc., showed sales of $217,833,058, as compared with $209,877,961 a year ago, an increase of only 3.8 per cent.

This is the smallest increase reported by the chains for any month since they were emerging from the depression in 1934.

N. Y. Central Net Declines in July

New York, Sept. 12 (AP).—New York Central Railroad Co. reported today July net income after fixed charges of $253,505, equal to 4 cents a share on capital stock. This compared with $1,049,693 in July, 1936, or 21 cents a share.

For the seven months ended July 31 net income was $6,748,629, equal to $1.05 a share on capital stock, against $1,410,557, or 28 cents a share in first seven months last year.

Farm Exports To Help Boost Trade Balance

Decrease in U. S. Imports Also Is Predicted by Commerce Expert.

A prediction the $145,000,000 foreign trade balance which has piled up against the United States in the first seven months of 1937 will be wiped out, or at least substantially reduced by the end of the year, was made yesterday by Ernest A. Tupper, chief of the division of foreign trade statistics of the Commerce Department.

Attributing part of the unfavorable dollar balance to the steeper rise in prices of goods imported than in those of export products, Tupper based his prediction on "normal expansion of exports in the fall of the year, together with smaller imports and larger exports of agricultural products as a result of more abundant crops."

Tupper pointed out that American exports of domestic products, valued at $1,772,000,000 in the first seven months of this year, an increase of $460,000,000 over the corresponding period of 1936, represented "a particularly striking increase in view of the adverse effect of last year's drought on shipments of certain agricultural products this year."

"Factors contributing to increase the value of exports," he said, "were the improvement in economic conditions abroad, the greater purchases of certain products essential to the rearmament programs of a number of countries, the generally higher level of export prices, and the concessions granted to United States products in the reciprocal trade agreements which have become effective."

LaGuardia Urges Workers to Unite

Lawrence, Mass., Sept. 12 (U.P.).—Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia, of New York City, today told more than 8,000 woolen textile employes that "Workers should be interested in taking advantage of the rights given them by Federal law and organize themselves for mutual protection." The mayor spoke at a meeting sponsored by C. I. O.'s Textile Workers organizing committee, which is seeking to represent 11,000 employes of the American Woolen Co. here in a bargaining election to be held this week.

Burke, Court Plan Foe, to Make Talk At Mt. Rushmore

Senator Edward R. Burke (Democrat), Nebraska, a leader of the opposition in the controversy over the President's court reorganization proposals, has been selected as principal speaker Friday at the Constitution Day unveiling of the Lincoln head at the Mount Rushmore, S. Dak., memorial.

This was announced here yesterday at Burke's office, where it was said the Senator will speak briefly at the unveiling ceremony, then deliver a Constitution Day address. It is anticipated his speech will deal with aspects of the Supreme Court controversy. The announcement aroused special interest in view of the possibility President Roosevelt will, on the same day, discuss this issue in his speech at the Monument Grounds here.

Last year the President was the principal speaker at Mount Rushmore ceremonies, when the head of Jefferson was unveiled.

Gov. Leslie Jensen of South Dakota and Gutzon Borglum, sculptor of the gigantic memorial, will be the other speakers Friday. In addition to Lincoln and Jefferson, the memorial is composed of the heads of Washington and Theodore Roosevelt, all carved in mammoth scale on the face of one of the Black Mountains.

Congressmen Ask Neutral Law Call

Continuing their campaign for public pressure to invoke the neutrality act in the Far East's undeclared war, six peace groups here yesterday made public messages from two Senators and eight Representatives indorsing such invocation.

Senator Bone (Democrat), Washington, wrote that "if the people of this Nation are wise they will demand that we keep out of this new war and attend strictly to our own business," while Senator Clark (Democrat), Missouri, said the law should be invoked and "the present situation illustrates the fact that it should of necessity be mandatory rather than discretionary."

Representatives from whom messages were received were Kopplemann, of Connecticut; Case, of South Dakota; Voorhis, of California; Sauthoff, of Wisconsin; Ford, of Mississippi; Hill, of Washington; Ludlow, of Indiana, and Knutson, of Minnesota.

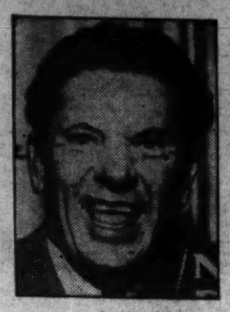
Bob Burns Says—



A well-trained salesman will suggest a substitute or will entertain the customer until the customer thinks of somethin' else. My Cousin Hod didn't make a good salesman. He wasn't much on conversation.

He got a job in a department store down home. One day a lady came in and says, "Do you have any demonstrations here today?" Cousin Hod says, "Nope." The lady started to walk out when she wheeled and came back and says, "You mean you have no demonstrations or no sales in a big store like this?" Cousin Hod said, "Oh yes, we got a sale—we got a sale on bathtubs, but no demonstrations."

British Lounge

The Suit That Fits and Flatters All 8 Builds of Men

The British Lounge V-8 . . . an instantaneous success from the day we introduced it to Washington men last year and destined to even greater heights this Fall. Patterns are more varied! 1937 styles more distinctive! Fabrics of even finer texture! The British lounge V-8 is an accurate portrayal of the Londoner's conception of casual smartness. It appears snug but isn't! This illusion is exemplified by the exacting workmanship which goes into every phase of the garment. It accentuates your strong points and minimizes the hollows and fleshy parts of your body. The slightly broader shoulders, fuller drape chest, lower tapered waistline and tapered trousers seemingly add inches to your height and create a more athletic appearance. It's the model that fits and flatters all 8 builds of men. You, too, as have hundreds of others, will find the British Lounge V-8 the most comfortable, best fitting suit you've ever worn.
